

Payment for Wallace: He'll let court decide

Crowding the act at public trough?

George Mussalem (SC - Dewdney) added yet another twist Wednesday to the convoluted debate on the Constitution Act.

Mussalem noted that few, if any, members of the Legislature failed to take advantage of the subsidized meals provided members in the official legislative dining room.

And he suggested that by participating in that subsidized program they were, in effect, receiving extra money from the government or at least part of their meal costs was being borne by the taxpayer.

Under the old terms of the Constitution Act it appears to be illegal for any MLA to receive extra benefits of any kind unless they are for work done for specific government or Legislature appointed committees, commissions or boards.

Conservative leader Scott Wallace Wednesday became the fourth British Columbia MLA to stand in possible violation of the Constitution Act. He will seek a B.C. Supreme Court ruling to clear his name.

In a dramatic statement to the house Wednesday afternoon Wallace said he had innocently received payment of $182.85 for expenses incurred during attendance at the B.C. Conference on the Family in 1976.

Wallace said once the matter was brought to his attention he sought legal advice and was told that he appeared to be in violation of the act but that the act was so archaic that a clear ruling was difficult to obtain.

"Having sought a legal opinion, I am advised that whether or not the Constitution Act has been breached or not is not clear," Wallace said.

"What is perfectly clear is the fact that on Oct. 24, 1976, a cheque for $182.85, and on Dec. 8, 1976, a cheque for $38.85 were paid by the ministry of human resources to cover some of my travel expenses. On Nov. 4, 1976, the Richmond Inn was paid $82.15 to cover the cost of three nights' accommodation while I attended the conference."

Recreation Minister Sam Bawit, Agriculture Minister James Hewitt, and Social Credit backbencher George Kerster (Coquitlam) are awaiting rulings on whether or not they breached the Constitution Act in 1976. All three received payment of expenses incurred while doing work on Housing Minister Hugh Curran's committee on housing.

The Constitution Act permits cabinet ministers to receive expenses. It also permits commission members, board members and members of cabinet on legislative committees to receive expense payments. The act makes no mention of expense payments to MLAs who perform tasks for a cabinet minister not authorized by cabinet order or the authority of the full Legislature.

Opposition members instituted the original motions of breach of privilege against the three Social Credit members. Wallace said he wanted to bring his problem to the house himself.

Any offence I may have committed was certainly done without intent and it may well be proven that I did not breach the Constitution Act," Wallace said. He added that whatever the circumstances or the interpretation placed on the events concerning him, "I believe the proper thing to

Forced addict treatment 'never works'

Compulsory treatment for B.C. heroin addicts will be in place by the end of 1978, Health Minister Robert McClelland said Wednesday.

Former health minister Dennis Cooke immediately labelled the statement "a political announcement" and said he was prepared to "bet compulsory treatment never comes into being." Even if it did, Cooke said, it would prove ineffective. "Compulsory incarceration of heroin addicts, then their release back into the community, has never worked," he said.

Despite the quick critical response McClelland said the compulsory treatment plan had the full backing of cabinet.

"It will require new health legislation and will emphasize treatment of the addict as a sick person, needing help rather than as a criminal," he said.

Target date for implementation is Dec. 31, 1978.

Victoria, Nanaimo and three mainland cities will have community care systems with a main 150-bed facility in the Vancouver area.

The 'hard case' addict would be committed for treatment to an in-patient unit, McClelland said. "As an alternative an addict could be referred to an in-patient unit as a voluntary patient or, where the personal history justified it, an addict could be referred to an out-patient community clinic."

"Preliminary plans call for a minimum of three years' treatment for every addict committed to the program."

The minister said he would probably introduce the required legislation in the spring session, 1978.

"We need a new, fresh attack on the heroin problem in B.C. to augment the attempt by police agencies to stem the flow of narcotics into the community," he said.

The NDP proposed earlier this year that a heroin maintenance program be established to help combat the problem.

Conservative party leader Scott Wallace said that he agreed in principle with the government proposal, but that he has reservations about its operation.

Wallace, a medical doctor, said application of the program could be dangerous because "this government hasn't been outstanding in understanding problems of young people."

He said strong safeguards were needed to ensure that the program wouldn't be abused and that decisions made to hold someone for treatment are regularly reviewed.

McClelland said the compulsory aspect of the new legislation would not be precedent setting. "Under the Mental Health Act and the Venerable Disease Suppression Act, for example, authority is vested in specific health officials to direct persons into treatment where warranted for their own or others' well being." There are appropriate penalties for non-compliance.

The minister said the new legislation would include appeal procedures for individuals disagreeing with the compulsory aspects of the bill.

Blast traps 150 miners, riot kills nine

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — An explosion ripped through a coal mine in northern Mozambique, trapping 150 black miners and leading to above-ground rioting that killed nine foreigners, Mozambique radio said Wednesday.

The government was reported to have accepted a South African offer of rescue teams to search for the entombed miners.

The blast and rioting took place at the underground mine at Moatize, a village 720 miles north of the seacoast capital of Maputo, Mozambique radio said.

Rescue operations were in progress, the radio said, and troops were sent to restore order at the Chipanga No. 3 mine, in remote Tete Province close to Rhodesia.

The radio said there was little hope of survival for the miners trapped in the explosion during the Tuesday afternoon shift. It came 11 months after a blast killed 95 miners in another shaft at Moatize.

The broadcast did not identify the foreigners who were killed in what it called "grave disturbances" after Tuesday's blast. The Johannesburg Star said some might have been Belgians and that the mine manager was Portuguese.

The South African Chamber of Mines said it offered to fly in four five-man rescue teams today and that the Mozambique government accepted.

Black-ruled Mozambique and white-ruled South Africa have no diplomatic relations and despite economic links, the Marxist-oriented government of President Samora Machel strongly opposes South Africa's policy of segregation.

Last September, 20 South Africans assisted in rescue operations after the methane gas explosion that killed the 95 miners.

The cause of Tuesday's blast was not reported, but miners familiar with the area said it could have been an explosion of methane or coal dust.

Interior may be first to feel IWA shutdown

There were indications Wednesday night that the International Woodworkers of America — B.C.'s biggest union — is ready to launch strike action in the southern interior, possibly as early as next week.

If it occurs, it will be because of failure to win industry agreement on the form an over-all pension plan is, to take.

High-ranking IWA sources said that the southern interior is the most likely strike target, but that if a walkout there didn't achieve the necessary results it could spread quickly to the coastal region, which includes Vancouver Island.

A formal announcement of the union's plans is expected to be made at a Vancouver news conference today.

This is bargaining year for the 42,000 IWA members in B.C. and the union served strike notice some time ago on the coastal and southern interior regions, but took no action. Last month it hailed as an important breakthrough, agreement by the province's three regions — coastal, southern and northern interior — to accept one over-all pension plan. This would mean a portable pension at last for IWA members working anywhere in western Canada.

However, as late as last week, the union said it ran into pension proposals from the industry that it found unacceptable.

The two contentious points: ● The industry wants past service credits to go only to existing IWA members, something the union calls a "dou-

Wolfe, service union trade strike threats

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

The B.C. Government Employees' Union wage dispute began to take on a rough and tumble appearance Wednesday as Finance Minister Evan Wolfe jumped into the picture with threats that were quickly matched by the union.

Wolfe warned that any selective strike action by the 37,000-member union could be met with a government lockdown of all but essential workers.

John Fryer, BOGEU general secretary, accused Wolfe of intimidation and raised the possibility of charging the minister under the B.C. Labor Code.

Wolfe was strongly critical of Fryer and before the day was out was caught in a crossfire of criticism from Fryer and former NDP labor minister William King.

Fryer said he was naive. King said his action was "extremely foolish."

Wolfe's ire was raised by the union's decision to idle one or more "target groups" of employees — likely liquor store workers — if the membership favors strike action in a vote expected to be completed by mid-September. The vote won't be taken until after mediation service have been used.

But if Wolfe is angry, so is the union. It considers a wage offer of less than what is allowed by the Anti-Inflation

Board guidelines to be insulting.

The offer is for a 4 1/2 per cent wage increase in the first year and three per cent in the second. The AIB allows six per cent in the first year and four per cent in the second.

Also unacceptable, says Fryer, is the government's stand against continuation of a cost-of-living allowance and objection to having grievances go to arbitration.

Actually, the union's threat to take out one group such as the liquor store workers was first reported in the Colonist almost two months ago, but there was no threat of government reprisal at that time.

Wolfe doesn't see anything

Rights review agreed

BELGRADE (AP) — Agreement was reached Wednesday for a conference ensuring full debate on human rights and other issues.

The breakthrough followed a surprise Soviet move that met the demands of Western nations for an open-ended conference ensuring full debate on human rights and other issues.

The agreement must now be sent by the delegations to their home governments for approval.

Salt Spring: Widening gulf between old and new

A LOOK at the future of the beautiful Gulf Islands — and their distinctive life styles — is taken in this four-part series by Colonist reporter Nancy Brown. Under the pressure of increasing permanent populations, summer residents, and hordes of tourists, the islands are bending but proving resilient in fighting for their former status. People, progress and over-government are what concern long-time residents.

THREE ISLANDS at a CHANGE OF TIDE

Second of four parts

By NANCY BROWN
Colonist Reporter

"As long as the ferries are few and far between, and they are crowded and expensive, Salt Spring Island will survive."

"But if they run more frequently then it will become just part of the Saanich Peninsula, and if they build that bridge from Vancouver that they talk about, then we will be just a bedroom suburb of Vancouver."

That's Hank Schubart talking after nine years on the island.

He's an architect who had a hand in the Salt Spring Island community plan, and who worries quite a bit these days about the future of what used to be a quiet little island.

HIS CONCERNS are reflected in conversations with many of the island's oldtimers who wonder how to keep the island rural without denying access to others who seek peace and quiet.

Many residents agree with Schubart's assessment that the key to the future lies with the provincial government and its handling of the ferries.

"A road is a line between two points and a ferry route is a dotted line, but the more frequent the service the closer the dots get, and soon you have the equivalent of a road," Schubart said.

Once travel becomes convenient and comfortable, the scenic quality of the island will attract more people.

"When that happens property prices will increase, the rural areas will change to suburban, life will get more and more regulated, and this will become a rich man's enclave," Schubart says.

Population growth on the island has been slow but steady.

Twenty years ago the island counted a population of 2,800, and it now has 4,500 residents.

BUT BUILDING is going on at a rapid pace.

In the first six months of this year the Capital Region issued 201 building permits to an approximate value of $2,154,682. The figure almost equals last year's total of 268 permits.

And there is a shift in the population, which at one time consisted in the main of retired people.

There is a younger population, both of youngsters who grew up on the island and who want to remain and newcomers who feel they can have a calmer way of life.

The influx of these young people has meant that the school population has increased from 169 to 1,100 in the last 20 years, the fastest increase occurring over the last five to 10 years.

These young people have

There are about 8,000 members in the southern Inter-

Sources said a strike in the southern Interior could take different shapes — either the whole industry in the region, or selective rotating strikes. Other contract issues have been put aside until the important pension matter is cleared up.

Cyprus tense in mourning

NICOSIA (AP) — Greek Cypriots began 40 days of mourning Wednesday for Cyprus President Archbishop Makarios whose death created a power vacuum on this tense, divided island. Turkish Cypriots immediately stepped up their demands for autonomy.

"We lost Makarios at a time when we needed him more than ever," Greek Cypriot Bishop Gregorius said of the American-educated archbishop who died Wednesday 10 days before his 64th birthday—of a heart attack he suffered Tuesday night.

Bishop Gregorius' seat is at Kyrenia, in the northern third of the island held by Turkish Cypriots and 25,000 mainland Turkish troops who invaded Cyprus in July, 1974, following a rightist coup by Greek Cypriots and Greeks that ousted Makarios briefly. He returned as president, but with little power over the Turkish Cypriots.

Since 1974, negotiations involving Greece, Turkey and the superpowers have continued intermittently over the Turkish Cypriot demand for a federal state with a weak central government and strong autonomous Turkish and Greek Cypriot zones. Cypriots of Greek descent make up about three-quarters of the population of 647,000. The archbishop's death caused no grief on the Turkish Cypriot side of the fortified line where United Nations troops—including about 500 Canadians—form a buffer between the two sides.

A Turkish Cypriot official said the death gives Greek Cypriots a chance to bring peace to the Mediterranean island by accepting the Turkish autonomy demand.

The No. 2 Turkish Cypriot leader, Nejat Konuk, prime minister of the self-proclaimed Turkish Cypriot federated state, said his people will recognize Makarios' successor as leader of the Greek Cypriots and not as president.

Makarios, born in western Cyprus as Michael Mouskos, received his early education as a novice monk and later studied in Greece, at Boston University and elsewhere. He was elected archbishop in 1950.

As a Greek Orthodox prelate elected for life, he had enormous popular appeal and won 95 per cent of the vote in the last contested presidential election in 1965. His popularity and his leading role in Cyprus' struggle for independence from Britain enabled him to rule as a benevolent dictator.

Birthdays 'over' for Ma Murray

LILLOOET, B.C. — A large crowd gathered in this B.C. interior village Wednesday to officially celebrate the 90th — and last — birthday of Ma Murray, the outspoken journalist with the tongue of nettie and heart of gold.

It's not that she doesn't expect to live until 91; Margaret Theresa Lally Murray has simply decided not to recognize any more years.

"Ninety's enough," she says in an interview with the same determination that made her famous across North America for her ability to tear strips off politicians and the pompous of all professions.

A congratulatory birthday message from Prime Minister Trudeau sits on her buffet table along with a sheet of affectionate cards from others she and her late husband George, befriended in a long career of Liberalism and newspapering.

Ma hasn't lost her touch, although she has softened a bit. "Shucks," she says. "I've just been lucky. I've got nothing to crow about. I'm content now just to lean back and count my blessings."

Montrealers drugged in CIA study

MONTREAL (CP) — A former official of a private foundation used by the CIA to channel research funds for brainwashing, experiments has confirmed that a Montreal psychiatric institute took part in the experiments.

Col. James Monroe, former executive director of the now-defunct Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology, said CIA funds to the Allan Memorial Institute amounted to "$20,000 to $30,000 a year for a couple of years."

The institute, part of the Royal Victoria Hospital, is a teaching wing of McGill University's psychiatry department and did the research work as part of a 25-year, $25-million project by the CIA to learn how to manipulate the human mind.

The McGill research was conducted by the late Dr. Ewen Cameron, director of the institute from 1943, when it was founded, to 1964. He died in 1967.

Monroe said in a telephone interview from Kingsland, Tex., that Cameron had no knowledge of the CIA links.

"There was no ethical cloud over anything Cameron was doing," he said, adding that the findings became public information in journals such as the Lancet of Britain and the Canadian Medical Journal.

A 1959 financial report of Monroe's society indicates it paid Dr. Cameron $18,405 in 1958 to conduct studies that included testing three highly potent drugs — Thorazine, LSD and Sernyl — on patients at the institute.

Thorazine is still marketed as a powerful tranquilizer but Sernyl has been withdrawn from the market for human consumption.

"The work they did had absolutely nothing to do with interrogation," said Monroe, a former air force expert on brainwashing.

"The fact that we were receiving funds from different sources was really no concern of Dr. Cameron's or any of the other grantees."

Several colleagues of Cameron and his widow doubted he knew the research results were passed on to the CIA.

"I knew he got grants from various organizations," said Mrs. Cameron from her home in Longville, N.Y., "but most of them came from the federal government. I never heard Dr. Cameron mention the CIA."

Dr. Maurice Dongier, director of the institute for the last six years, said he did not know of the CIA connection until he was told about it Tuesday.

Dr. Robert Cleghorn, institute director from 1964 to 1970, said the only person who might have known of the CIA link is dead but he refused to elaborate. He was not referring to Cameron.

Dongier and Cleghorn say research grants are studied more closely today than they were in the past.

Dongier said there "was not the same kind of consciousness 20 years ago as there is today. At that time there would be nobody checking on it."

But Dongier said research on sensory deprivation has been pertinent in determining how people react to living in submarines or space, and he thinks it would be accepted today.

"I don't see why that kind of research should be turned down as long as the work is published. Our official policy is not to accept a grant for research if the work is not published."

Scientology's roots 'fiction'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia Supreme Court hearing was told this week by a committee of the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons that the dianetic teachings of the Church of Scientology are rooted in science fiction.

The committee said the church's teachings display "an arrogance that cannot be accepted in any dedicated seeker of the truth" and "is clearly written by a small-minded person and is addressed to the small-minded."

The committee's assessment of Scientology was made at a hearing in which Dr. Pieter Taams of Maple Ridge is appealing the college council's decision to suspend him from practice.

Taams was disciplined by the college council after a committee of inquiry found that he, among other acts of unprofessional conduct, improperly used dianetics and Scientology in treating a patient for emotional problems.

The college ordered him to refrain from practising medicine for three months and fined him $3,000 plus $2,000 towards the cost of the committee's inquiry.

Mr. Justice J. A. Macdonald was told that the college council committee concluded that Taams had:

- Told a woman that only his method of treatment could cure her;
- Used methods of treatment not recognized by medical science and not founded on responsible medical experience or research;
- Took emotional and financial advantage of the patient contrary to the code of ethics;
- Claimed payment for treatment not performed;
- And failed to maintain proper medical records.

Agency wants to say it's sorry

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA will attempt to locate and notify individuals who secretly were given drugs or were the subjects of other mind-controlling techniques in agency-sponsored experiments more than 12 years ago, its director testified Wednesday.

Stansfield Turner told a joint hearing of the Senate intelligence committee and the health subcommittee he had no idea how many individuals were involved in the testing, some without their knowledge.

More than 80 institutions, including 44 colleges or universities, and 185 non-government researchers were used in the tests, among them Montreal's McGill University.

Many were not aware that the CIA was supplying the funding through intermediary foundations, Turner said.

He said no names of individuals who may have received drugs unwittingly are in CIA records, but "we are working to determine if there are adequate clues to lead to their identification, and if so, how to go about fulfilling the government's responsibilities in the matter."

Turner told the senators he would not release the names of institutions and researchers who did the testing. But he said under questioning that perhaps some way could be found of notifying them privately and letting them decide whether their names should be public.

He said he was legally bound under the U.S. Privacy Act not to disclose the names of the individuals without their consent.

The CIA director emphasized that the project, ultimately known as MK-ULTRA, as ended 12 years ago after continuing for nearly 2 decades.

The pipeline debate

IN THE REPORT of Lysyk Commission on planned Alcan natural gas pipeline, the emphasis placed on "the negative impact" of the multi-million dollar project on the people of the Yukon could be in for a rough going-over in the special debate scheduled in Parliament today and Friday before the federal cabinet makes the final decision on a go-ahead.

The report by UBC Dean of Law, Kenneth Lysyk, calling for a two-year delay in the planned 1979 start of construction by Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. of Calgary, invites a great amount of questioning.

Dean Lysyk expresses deep concern over the "undesirable social and economic consequences" of the project and among conditions he wants met so that they "can be kept within acceptable limits" is the payment by Foothills of $200 million to a Yukon heritage fund in eight yearly instalments.

This would be compensation for what the report says would be "unquantifiable social and economic costs", which makes it difficult to see how the amount was arrived at, and also "for those changes following in the wake of the pipeline that assuredly will detract from the quality of life in the Yukon."

On this point, the changes in the quality of life in the territory that came from the construction of the Alaska Highway, along which the pipeline would be installed, are unlikely to be any different with only a fraction of the number of workers on that job needed for the gas line construction. There were 30,000 on the highway construction and it is estimated between 2,000 and 2,500 will be required for the pipeline.

The report also calls upon the federal government to make $50 million available to the native people of the territory pending settlement of their land claims, and in doing so gives population statistics on which there could be interesting discussion in the parliamentary debate.

Of the 22,000 population of the Yukon there are about 6,000 Indian people, and of that number, 2,000 live in Whitehorse. These 2,000, the report states, comprise more than 75 per cent of the total Indian population along the highway-pipeline route.

This means that fewer than 1,000 Indians live in the outer regions where the pipeline would pass, and its presence could hardly be any more disturbing to their "traditional" way of life, which the report describes as a subsistence form of hunting, fishing and trapping, than the highway has been.

Dean Lysyk insists that the interests of the 6,000 native people are "much more important to the future of the Yukon than any pipeline." But with the damage having been done, perhaps the positive aspects of the project will be stressed.

Vicious circle

WHEN PRESIDENT JIMMY CARTER turned thumbs down on the United States' Air Force's enthusiastically promoted program for the B-1 bomber, it may have signalled the beginning of the end of manned penetration of an enemy's territory.

President Carter scrapped the multi-billion dollar bomber program in favor of the equally accurate, equally devastating cruise missile.

It made possible speculation that the big bomber would go the way of the battleship, which became obsolete with the arrival of the aircraft carrier. The shattering end of the Royal Navy's Repulse and Prince of Wales at the hands of Japanese bombers convinced even their most stubborn defenders that such capital ships were no longer militarily viable.

The cruise missile, favored by President Carter much to the chagrin of his air officers, besides being less costly than the manned bomber is, or was, far less vulnerable.

Released from its delivery vehicle, it would race to its target only 100 feet above the ground, following the contour, and thus escape the vigilant radar watch aimed skyward.

But North Atlantic Treaty Organization specialists have now disclosed that the Soviet Union, alert to the cruise missile threat, even before the B-1 contract was cancelled, were building enormously high towers to accommodate radar which could "look down" for approaching dangers.

So now, to make the cruise missile effective, some method must be found of eliminating the radar tower. It is an endless and vicious circle.

Defences down

By ANTHONY LEJEUNE from Britain

If war breaks out in Europe, or (which is perhaps more probable), if the Russians use the threat of war as a political lever, Britain's role as an "unsinkable aircraft carrier" will be as important as it was in the Second World War. No fewer than 40 per cent of the aircraft defending Western Europe would come from, or be staged through, the British Isles.

Like Hitler in 1940, but with enormously more sophisticated weapons, the Russians would certainly launch a blitzkrieg against British airfields. The object would be both to knock out the aircraft already there and to prevent any build-up of American reinforcements through Britain.

This danger is now being taken very seriously. The airfields are in the process of being re-camouflaged and protected with guided weapons. The aircraft are being put into concrete shelters. The radar and other spotter systems are being improved.

Britain's air defenses have been cut back, during the 1960s and '70s, far beyond the level of prudence, and the strict new limits on government spending (the axe is aimed always at defence rather than the welfare state) still prevent much which needs to be done. Bloodhound supersonic ground-to-air missiles, for example, are being disposed at the moment only to cover the eastern part of Britain.

NATO intelligence officers and air force planners are uncomfortably aware of how far the situation has been allowed to deteriorate. By the early 1980s Russia will have a fleet of nearly 1,000 long-range supersonic bombers, including the remarkable "Backfire," which can hedgehog under the radar screen, drop ordinary bombs or launch 150-mile-range stand-off missiles.

There is no doubt that the Russians consider Britain a primary target for this bomber force. Soviet aircraft are constantly prowling in the air-space around Britain — the RAF has intercepted 30 Soviet planes since the beginning of this year — and Soviet fighters, bristling with electronic equipment, monitor the coastal defences.

The newly appointed chief of Britain's defence staff, Air Chief Marshal Sir Neil Cameron, sees another menacing possibility. "I particularly fear a chemical attack on our airfields," he says. "That way the Russians could try to knock them out without damaging them, and then land on them."

During the Second World War he spent six months flying with Soviet pilots on the Russian front, and he has a grim respect for the Soviet air force.

He admits that the situation is alarming.

But there is another, more insidious, threat.

Recent events in Britain have shown very clearly that, if the Russians did provoke a political crisis by using military blackmail, they would have active and vocal allies in the trade unions and in the Labor Party. These elements, who would clamor for "compromise" (meaning surrender), may not be very numerous but they wield considerable industrial power and they know how to manipulate the media.

Interestingly and significantly, the editor of the Yorkshire miners' newspaper, when he believed (or so he said) that the police were harassing him, took refuge the other day in — of all places — East Germany: a country which people usually flee from rather than to.

Significant also is the fact that, during the past few weeks, there has been a campaign of derogation and ridicule against Britain's security services. No single source is apparently responsible. Odd stories have simply been floated, in the hope that gullible newspapers would snap at them. Which, of course, gullible newspapers did.

Altogether, there are danger signals in the air. The danger may be long-term or medium-term rather than immediate; but it is disturbing nevertheless.

It is the relationship between our senior bureaucrats and the taxpayers — the bureaucrats in their plush offices adorned by expensive imported vegetation, the ecstasy . . . and for the taxpayer it is the agony of ever-increasing taxes.

Ottawa Offbeat

'The contest of splendor'

By RICHARD JACKSON

Some columns come easy. Some hard.

Some practically write themselves.

And even better, the odd one, the very, very odd one, like the other day, written-to-order, all down there, neatly typed and signed.

Couldn't have happened at a better time.

High summer temperatures had turned the usually hot and humid Ottawa Valley into a sauna at a record 33.6 Celsius, or, if you insist on the more readily understandable, 92.5 Fahrenheit.

This translates into 113 degrees on the humidex scale which is summer's equivalent to winter's wind chill factor.

So it was going to be one of those "hard column" days . . .

Until the mail arrived, and there was a note from good old J. Robert (Bob) Howie, two-term Conservative MP for the New Brunswick riding of York-Sunbury.

He's been around "Fat City" five years now, but it's not so long that he still doesn't blanch at the sight of some of the excesses that confront him.

Even the relatively modest opulence of the Confederation Building where he has his office — and parliamentarians enjoy their private dining salon, gym, billiard room, and other conveniences and distractions — disturbs him.

"Gee," he has been heard to exclaim when gazing through the tropical flora festooning the foyers on every floor, "I sure hope none of the boys from down home ever see this."

What set him off the other day was a little item in Hansard about the "contest of splendor," as he called it, between the Finance Department and the Treasury Board, the two agencies of government supposedly most concerned about government spending restraint.

So to "Ottawa Offbeat" he addressed the following fulmination: "The Agony and The Ecstasy is not just the name of Michaelangelo's famous painting on the Sistine Chapel ceiling."

"It is the relationship between our senior bureaucrats and the taxpayers . . . the bureaucrats in their plush offices adorned by expensive imported vegetation, the ecstasy . . . and for the taxpayer it is the agony of ever-increasing taxes."

The Finance Department and the Treasury Board — the federal dollar-watchers, the very agencies with the responsibility for keeping the lid on the big bureaucratic spenders — moved their offices into Place Bell Canada, the most splendored tower in many-splendored towered Fat City.

"Restraint is their business," writes Bob Howie, "But it must be restraint for others."

"Because it says right here in Hansard (Page 712 — and there it all was) that Finance spent $1,600,000 on new furniture and $58,000 for tropical plants."

"Pity the poor Treasury Board scrimping along on only $1,200,000 for furniture and a mere $58,000 for verdure."

"What did they do with all the furniture and plants they already had? Toss it all out? Ship it to the second hand dealer?"

"How's that for shoving it to the ever-suffering taxpayer?"

"Ah, but wait. Some wonderful day, the taxpayer will have one fleeting moment of ecstasy sitting alone in a small, drab polling booth with his ballot. As he stares thoughtfully at the ceiling may he think of Michaelangelo and The Agony and The Ecstasy."

Bumper crops give India surplus grain storage problem

By MOHAMMED ASLAM from New Delhi

New Delhi is also anxiously looking forward to the establishment of regional grain buffers as part of the global food security system being evolved by the World Food Council. These may prove convenient let-outs for Indian grain not needed urgently for domestic use.

It was perhaps in this context that India last May suggested to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization the recycling of its huge food stockpile on a replenishment basis.

Under the tentative scheme, India could supply grain to meet the needs of scarcity areas, provided the stock could be replenished at a future date. Besides helping the needy nations, it would enable India to save enormous amounts being spent on storage.

Wheat could be sold to China, with whom trade has just begun after a gap of 15 years. Reports indicate that the continued drought and serious failure of cash and food crops in some parts of China have been causing extreme concern to the Communist Party Central Committee.

Peking has already contracted for 3.1 million tons of wheat from the U.S., Australia, Canada and Argentina for delivery this year. If India were brought in supplies could reach China more quickly than from other countries and at a lower cargo expenses too.

At home, the Agricultural Ministry is considering various proposals for stimulating off-take from the public distribution system. These include setting up the distribution set-up itself by opening more shops in villages, payment of a part of wages of workers engaged in major irrigation and other development projects in the form of grains, popularization of wheat in non-wheat-consuming areas and promotion of cultivation of hard wheat types like "durum."

Moscow will obviously only accept wheat of the same or similar quality as it lent Delhi. Export of wheat is a difficult proposition for many reasons, chiefly the price gap. The international wheat price at about 80 rupees a ton is roughly half what it costs the government.

Secondly, grain stocks are mounting world-wide and the demand from wheat importers is mainly for hard grain types. The Indian wheat is, by and large, soft or medium hard.

Despite the plentiful food position, the government is not revoking rationing although the ration has been increased from eight kilograms per head per month to 12.

According to the new Food Minister, Surjit Singh Barnala, a storage capacity of 18.1 million tons already exists. An additional three million tons capacity will be made available during 1977-78.

A project for construction of an extra capacity of 3.2 million tons, with assistance from the World Bank, is being planned.

Of the total food stock, about 19.2 million tons is directly in the possession of the FCI (i.e. the federal pool) and the rest with the states.

At one stage, when the stocks touched the 17-million-ton mark for the first time last October, it seemed as though the bumper harvest had taken the authorities by surprise: they ran short of warehousing. In villages, every bit of suitable space was utilized to store grain, including schools and factories.

The government fixed purchase prices for coarse and other grains in order to ensure remunerative returns to farmers for their produce. Middlemen were eliminated and official agencies directly procured grains from growers. Wherever there were signs of prices falling below the control level owing to massive arrivals in the rural markets, the FCI stepped in to buy grain at support prices.

The breakthrough in agriculture — the key sector which decides the growth rate for the entire economy — came in 1975-76 with a record output of 118 million tons after 15 years of wide fluctuations.

Between 1960 and 1975, there were six years of good crops, three of marginal improvement and six of declines in production, according to a study published by the Reserve Bank of India.

John Mellor, professor at Cornell University in the United States, who has served as chief economist in the U.S. (Agency for International Development), has said that India has done much better in feeding its huge population and has outstripped China in the ratio between food production and population growth.

He says India, with a population of 680 million, has become the largest grain producer in the world and has "one of the largest potentials of any nation for future increases in grain production."

Mellor adds: "Contrary to standard stereotypes, India increased its production of foodgrains approximately 2.5 per cent per year from 1966 to date, a rate significantly higher than the population growth rate of about 2.1 per cent for the same period. The result has been modest improvements in diets and a substantial decline in death rates."

A plot by Roman Catholics to kill Elizabeth I was discovered 391 years ago today — in 1586.

Anthony Babington, a supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, planned to kill the Queen and assume power with the help of English Catholics. The interception of letters to Mary and the confession of one plotter foiled the plan and all involved were executed.

1782 — Percy Bysshe Shelley,

THE HARSH reality of the drug trade has not been lost on Jimmy Carter, 39th president of the United States.

Carter wants the marijuana laws of his country eased — eased for the possession of up to one ounce of the weed. Carter says the present law is an exercise in futility and that thousands have criminal records as a result.

Carter will get heavy flak for his de-criminalization proposal, but it should also be noted that Carter is against marijuana and a strong proponent of tougher legislation against the dealers of any form of drug.

THERE IS the off chance, however, that many people will gain the wrong impression from Carter's decriminalization plan. Many will take this to mean that Carter does not feel marijuana is harmful — that it is fine to use.

Nothing, of course, could be further from the truth. Just as there is no way to deny that smoking cigarettes is injurious to health, or that regular consumption of booze does not harm the body.

Both are injurious and marijuana is every bit as injurious. Some doctors are of the opinion that pot smoking might well be most debilitating of all.

MANY DRUGS do have medicinal uses of one sort or another. Marijuana does not fall into this category. It has no redeeming medical usefulness of any kind. It has, in fact, but one purpose — to get the user high, stoned, spaced-out.

It can be strongly addictive and Dr. David Ausubel of the Bureau of Educational Research at the University of Illinois, refutes the claim that users can cut away from cannabis any time they want. He maintains the regular user, like any other addict, when anticipating separation from the source of supply, takes steps to accumulate sufficient reserve to tide him over.

ONE STUDY conducted by Dr. Ausubel, revealed that enforced deprivation resulted in anxiety, restlessness, irritability and even a state of depression with suicidal tendencies.

Dr. Harvey Powelson of the University of California at Berkeley, compared marijuana with alcohol. His conclusion was to the point — a point pot users should consider.

"The pot effect on the brain is much more rapid than alcohol," he wrote. "The mental effect from marijuana takes about three years, whereas alcohol takes ten times that time."

THERE ARE many reports available which suggest marijuana is not the innocent and harmless weed that many would have us and our children believe. These findings have come from every part of the world and have been checked and cross-checked many times. Here is a partial list of damage which appeared among regular and chronic users.

Irreversible brain damage. Damage to lungs and breathing systems, just as with cigarettes. Respiratory crippling of young comparable to a two-pack-a-day smoker of 10 to 20 years. Male hormone (testosterone) level and sperm count reduced. Some young male users left sterile and impotent.

DIMINISHED immunity response. Personality changes, apathetic behaviour and an interference with the ability to measure time and distance.

Marijuana, even in moderate amounts, causes massive damage to the entire cellular process. It results in chromosome reduction from the normal 46 to 38, down to eight.

Tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) is the principle psychoactive factor in cannabis and THC tends to accumulate in the brain and gonads and other fatty tissues in the same manner as DDT. And THC persists in the body long after ingestion, some residual amounts found for a week.

GERMAN DOCTORS have probably done more basic research on cannabis than doctors of any other nation and their collective conclusion is that the smoking of marijuana produces brain damage that can never be reversed.

Any move to legalize marijuana would be catastrophic to this and future generations and this is why President Carter's decriminalization proposal should not be taken as any move towards legalization.

Incidentally, insects are smarter than people. Insects will not go near the cannabis plant — not even to pollinate. Pollination is left completely to the wind.

Optimism read in tea leaves

West sees renewed Chinese opening

By JOSEPH KRAFT
From Washington

"Two-time loser comes back" was the main theme of comment engendered by the return to Teng Hsiao-ping to a top leadership post in China last month. But in fact the personnel reshuffle in Peking portends a far wider policy change.

A kind of political interregnum under a caretaker government has come to an end. China has already embarked upon a new domestic program, and seems about to launch a foreign policy which provides an opening for easier relations with Washington.

During the long period of Mao Tse-tung's reign, No. 2 men came and went bringing with them various changes in policy emphasis. The last administration under Mao's reign was headed by Premier Chou En-lai and lasted from roughly 1971 to Chou's death in 1976.

As Premier, Chou subordinated revolutionary ideology and social transformation to the needs of economic modernization. In keeping with the modernization theme, he initiated the opening to the West which led to former President Nixon's visit to Peking in 1972.

Chou's designated successor was Teng Hsiao-ping, a former party secretary disgraced during the cultural revolution but brought back in 1973 as first deputy prime minister. In the first months of 1976, Teng moved strongly to carry out Chou's mandate for modernization. But he ran afoul of the revolutionary zeal of Mao's wife, Chiang Ching, and her three allies in the so-called Shanghai group which was later stigmatized as the Gang of Four. In April 1976 Teng was ousted in disgrace.

At that point there began an interregnum with a caretaker government under a then little-known leader Hua

Teng Hsiao-ping
... stresses modernization

Kuo-feng. The interregnum continued through the death of Mao in September — when Hua who had become premier also became party chairman — through the purge of the Gang of Four, and on to the slow rehabilitation of Teng himself. With Teng's reemergence as first deputy premier, and the expulsion of the Gang of Four from the party, the interregnum is over. A Teng administration has begun.

Already the domestic course of the new administration has been blocked out. In a series of conferences and directives, Teng has stressed all the themes of modernization he inherited from Chou. He is pushing for improved industrial management, science and technology, agricultural productivity, military modernization, foreign trade, and education.

Foreign policy is more ambiguous. For one thing Teng was particularly tough when he met with Henry Kissinger before former President Ford's China trip in 1975. For a second, Peking has recently made a series of moves — in trade, fisheries and navigation — which work to ease the most acute practical difficulties with the Soviet Union.

Still the Washington readers of the Chinese tea leaves are basically optimistic. They discount Teng's performance with Kissinger on the grounds he was acting under pressure from Mme. Mao and her revolutionary colleagues. They see the moves toward Russia as bargaining steps designed to remind Washington that China can always turn to Moscow if necessary.

They believe that at bottom domestic considerations are pushing Teng to renew the opening to the West which Chou initiated. Teng's internal program, in their view, requires expertise, equipment and credit from Japan, Europe, and to a lesser extent the U.S. The U.S. is of prime importance to China, during the modernization, as a security guarantee against Russia. Indeed, that ultimate Communist maverick, Albania, has been turning against China precisely because Peking is tilting toward the West.

Against this background, the visit to the People's Republic by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance this month holds a fair prospect. The Chinese are unlikely to demand that Washington abandon all connection with Taiwan before any further cooperation with Peking. On the contrary there is hope that Vance can set the stage for forward motion in a wide range of secondary issues such as trade, credits, and cultural exchange. Progress on these items can move steadily forward over several years until the day when American opinion is finally prepared for the break with Taiwan that must eventually come as the price for full normalization of relations with Peking. For all these reasons Secretary Vance, who met with Teng in a visit to China in 1975, is "pleased" at the prospect of seeing him again.

Champs saluted

Victoria Sr. Babe Ruth took back seat to the Bates and went on to prove they've got what it takes. While the news media gave the Bates their time the Sr. Babe Ruth Team continued to climb. Winning the Vancouver Island Championship in style, proving they have a team that is really worthwhile. With only the support of a very few, this team did what they set out to do. It's the lack of support that seems such a pity when they've won the B.C. Championship for our city.

There is so much to be said for this team and hopefully now that they will be travelling this Friday to Wyoming to represent British Columbia, there will be better coverage through the media to keep the people here in Victoria better informed.

Voters ignored

I view with alarm and apprehension the proposed division of medical service between the contemplated new hospital at Helmcken Road and the Victoria General Hospital, as advised by some Toronto consultants. Do we need these expensive experts now to decide that is best for us? Their judgment appears to be biased and unrealistic, contrary to the well being and wishes of the people as well as the medical profession.

Now for the crux of the matter. Some people seem to forget that the Sisters of St. Ann were kind enough and very generous in presenting to the citizens of Victoria in 1972 as a gift the St. Joseph Hospital, as it was known then. Shortly after St. Ann Academy's structures and grounds were sold to the former Social Credit administration for a price below market value in order that the expansion of the hospital be carried out.

According to the Sisters, the provincial government has a moral if not legal obligation to use the land it bought from them for what it was intended — the extension of Victoria General. Therefore I would like to know if the government can retain these lands when it does not want nor intend to proceed with said extension? The land and buildings are used as offices and parking lots by the administration.

Since this situation concerns also the City of Victoria, as well as its citizens, it is rather disconcerting to realize that the mayor and his council have not seen fit to speak out in protest at the eventual phasing out of the Victoria General Hospital.

Is it not a fact that some of these gentlemen, when aspiring to office be it at the senior or junior level of government before election time, are quite eager to get and ask for your support. But when elected they fail to represent and ignore completely the people who elected them!

Goldstream

Once again there has been another accident in the 1100 block Goldstream. Though this one was not fatal, it is still serious. There have been four fatal accidents in this area.

The road is winding and narrow with parking on one side. Children must walk on the road and residents must back cars out directly onto the road, with visibility not good. A public beach is in this area. This now adds to the traffic and people congestion. One other family and I have filed a complaint to the traffic division of the Colwood RCMP.

We would like to see:

1. A winding road sign replaced.
2. Lowering of speed in the 1100 and 1200 block to 25 m.p.h.
3. A warning of Caution Children or Beach Area at the north and south end.

Thirty-five miles per hour is too fast for the lay and the visibility of the road. Residents are apt to be cautious, but people outside this area have no forewarning signs to alert them to the conditions. If signs are posted this can warn them and the excuse of "I didn't know" can't hold up.

The RCMP have said they will forward the complaint with their request. We would like all people who drive this route and residents to forward letters to: Traffic division, RCMP Colwood; Mr. Harper, Highways Department, Burnside Road; Lyle Kahl, MP.

With the demolition of the Jones Building scheduled for this week, allow me to say a few parting words, a sort of obituary.

First, it didn't surprise me to hear that the Royal Bank couldn't incorporate the building into the plans for the new complex that's to go up at Douglas and Fort.

Banks aren't noted for their heritage-preservation efforts. Their modern concrete and glass palaces stand as visible monuments to financial success in an otherwise troubled world of economics.

Banks are the shrewdest and most calculating of all enterprises, and don't let the folksy TV commercials fool you.

The Royal Bank's claim that it was impossible to retain the old building, or even its facade, is an excuse.

Naturally, the building could have been retained, but at a price. The bank, however, isn't willing to pay that price. If banks would waste their time (and money) on such non-revenue producing things as heritage preservation, they wouldn't be making so much money.

The Royal Bank has received some unfavorable publicity over the Jones Building controversy, but bank officials undoubtedly know that the issue will be forgotten sooner or later.

In the bank's favor, of course, was the fact that the Jones Building was not the most functionally-designed office building.

Architect Samuel MacIure was probably not at his best when he designed the building.

But that didn't distract from the building's "friendly" appearance. No modern building that will be erected in its place can possibly have the human scale, the unobtrusive appearance of the Jones Building.

We'll be sad to see the old Jones Building go. We'll even have some understanding for the Royal Bank's reluctance to save an old building at what would have been a high cost in terms of money and convenience.

But the bank shouldn't expect us to believe that it was impossible to incorporate the building into the new complex. Much more ambitious and difficult tasks have been accomplished in Europe in heritage preservation.

And with that, I'll close my files on the Jones Building.

Next Friday, the 12th of August, that is, Victoria will celebrate the Queen's Silver Jubilee.

It's a little late, admittedly — the event itself took place in Britain more than a month ago — but if the enthusiasm for the preparations are an indication, it'll be a humdinger of a party.

Most every segment of the business community will make some effort to give the day a special meaning; the city's military establishment has lined up a program that'll be remembered for some time to come.

The most endearing aspect of the Silver Jubilee bash is the fact that demand for it came to Mayor Michael Young from the grass roots.

Young decided to forgo the structured festivities promoted by the federal government for Canada Day (formerly Dominion Day) in favor of the Silver Jubilee celebration.

I still maintain it was a good decision, Pierre Berton's letter to the editor last Sunday notwithstanding.

I don't mind being raked over the coals, especially if it's done in style.

Berton's letter lambasting me for ridiculing Ottawa's $3.5 million Happy Birthday Canada campaign contained a few false assumptions, however.

No, I didn't scoff at the Centennial. A country's 100th birthday is worth a special celebration. I also didn't criticize Expo 67. I felt that Canada should go all out if it was to be a worthy host to the world.

As you may have surmised from the topics of this column and those of the past few weeks, things are quiet at Victoria city hall.

As a matter of fact, things are quiet in every municipal hall in Greater Victoria.

It's the usual summer doldrums which will end as soon as politicians begin to think about re-election which should be just about any time now.

So, as we move into fall, expect a few snide remarks by some alderman here and the odd kite-flying by another alderman there.

Publicity will be the name of the game, and the aldermen will go to great lengths to get their share of it. I'll let you know when it starts.

Strike talk tough working with a wage offer that falls short of the guidelines.

"I want to make it very clear that the anti-inflation guidelines are a ceiling, not a floor for pay increases," he said at a news conference. "It is imperative that restraint be shown in our public sector compensation. The current trend for the Canadian dollar is a clear indication of this."

As minister of finance, I am alarmed at the statements made by Mr. Fryer. This is a threat against the people of B.C. and we will not let the people be treated in this fashion."

Wolfe said that if selective strike action did occur, the government "would be forced to consider the implications for the whole public service."

"In other words, all government employees would be affected — except those in essential services. We cannot allow the people of British Columbia to be held up to ransom by a selective strike action."

He said the government was anxious to reach a settlement, and urged both parties to bargain in good faith and "not through the media."

Fryer said Wolfe was guilty of interfering in the union's right to collective bargaining. He pointed out that the membership had agreed to selective strike action if necessary during its June convention.

The reason for picking possibly just one target group was to create a minimum inconvenience for the public, but a maximum impact on the government, Fryer said. Wolfe's idea of a full-scale lockout would be much more harmful to the public, he said.

Because of this, Wolfe was

naive and showed a "great lack of understanding of the collective bargaining concept."

"What he is saying to the people of the Victoria area (the biggest concentration of government workers is in Victoria) is that if you dare to support your union and vote to strike, you will be locked out," Fryer said.

He said such lockout action on the part of the government would probably lead to the walkout of essential workers — something that would never occur during a regular strike.

At best, Fryer said, Wolfe was guilty of over-reaction.

"A less generous interpretation is that he is trying to use scare tactics prior to our taking a strike vote. I have been in touch with our legal counsel in that regard, because I have some real questions in my mind about whether the attempt to intimidate employees prior to a strike vote is in fact liable for charges under the labor code."

King (NDP-Revelstoke-Slocan) said it was an "extremely foolish policy" on Wolfe's part to indulge in public "sabre-rattling" in such a case.

Such "foolhardy and irresponsible" behavior by a cabinet minister could only serve to inflame an already dangerous situation, he said.

"He is doing no service to the public with that kind of statement."

Wolfe, he said, had little or no bargaining experience and would be well advised to leave the job to the proper agency.

Island Princess link out until Saturday

The Island Princess ferry, an important connecting link with the northern part of Vancouver Island, will be out of service from Thursday at 8 p.m. to Saturday at 9 p.m.

The ferry bridges the gap in the north Island road between Kelsey Bay and Beaver Cove.

The gap in the highway is being built at present, but is not yet opened.

The highways department, which operates the ferry, said that the ferry would leave Kelsey Bay at 4:30 p.m. Thursday, and emergency engine repairs would be carried out at Beaver Cove.

Court may end occupation today

Ousted leaders still in office

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

The ousted leaders of the biggest laborers' union local in B.C. continued to occupy the local's Vancouver offices for a second day and night Wednesday, but they may have to retreat today under court order.

It all depends on whether the appointed trustees of the local are successful in obtaining an order from the B.C. Supreme Court that would have the local's key men and their followers vacate the premises. A hearing is scheduled for 2 p.m.

The trouble began last week when the union's international headquarters in Washington, D.C., unhappy with the way the 4,000-member Local 602 was being run, placed it in trusteeship and ordered a hearing in Victoria Aug. 22.

Nick Kiriak and Ron McClung — ousted as president and secretary-treasurer respectively in the move — "stormed the gates" Tuesday with more than 20 supporters and said they would stay to do the union's business.

It was believed to be the first such move in B.C. labor history and it produced division the first day, an actual double-occupancy. The invaders (who really considered themselves the defenders of the union) laid claim to seven of the eight offices, while the outnumbered trustees stood guard in the one remaining room.

By Wednesday, the trustees departed to leave their case in the hands of the courts. "They've given us the pieces of paper to appear in court," said Al Herd, who was denoted from business manager to business agent when the local was placed in trusteeship.

Herd said five men are named in the action — himself, Kiriak, McClung; Robert Magee, a former executive member; and Robert Berggren, former recording secretary.

As he prepared to bed down in the building Tuesday night Kiriak had said it would be union business "as usual" Wednesday morning. But it didn't quite work out that way.

"We did conduct a little business — but with things being the way they are, it wasn't as we would like it," Herd said Wednesday.

The opposing troops got through the night without any skirmishes and Herd reported only one "mysterious" incident.

"About five to seven this morning there was a power outage. The power went out in the whole building. We don't know what caused it. We've heard rumors, but we don't know," Herd said.

CNTU rejects federal plea for restraint

OTTAWA (CP) — The Quebec-based Confederation of National Trade Unions made clear Wednesday it will not agree to restrain wage demands when the federal wage and price controls program is lifted. Vice-president Andre L'Heureux said the controls program, implemented in October, 1975, removed the long-established right of unions to bargain collectively for wages and helped maintain inequalities among workers and regions. He said unions would want to make up ground lost during the controls period and "we can't ask workers to restrain their demands." L'Heureux was speaking to reporters after he and other union executive members met with Finance Minister Donald Macdonald, Labor Minister John Munro, Industry Minister Jean Chretien and Senator Jean Marchand, a former CNTU president, to discuss an early end to controls.

Protesters ask closure of Yonge Street strip

TORONTO (CP) — Protesters, petitioning to close downtown Yonge Street's sex-parlor strip and increase punishments for murderers and sex offenders, brought angry messages to city hall Wednesday.

The 150 protesters marched to mourn the death of Manuel Jaques, the 12-year-old shoe-shine boy whose body was found on the roof of a downtown Yonge Street body-rub parlor.

Four men have been charged with first-degree murder in connection with the slaying.

Many of the protesters carried placards that read: "tar and feather them." Others said, "hang them" and "kill the dirty pigs."

The marchers paused for one minute's silence outside Charlie's Angels sex parlor, where Manuel's body was found Monday morning.

The demonstrators, residents of the Regent Park community where Manuel lived, were met by Mayor David Crombie on the city hall steps.

"I know how you feel," he said. "Every neighborhood in the city feels the same way."

Crombie said the provincial government understands that "we need to move now, and I promise you we will."

Sheila Holmes, a school board trustee and one of the organizers of the march, said her community is full of fear.

"This despicable act has upset everybody," she said. "We have had other problems in the past and nothing has been done. This time we are not stopping."

Linda Arango, 27, a Regent Park mother alarmed by the death of Manuel, said in an interview: "My eldest son Paul, who's 12, was going to work down at the EX (Canadian National Exhibition) this month but I've had to scrap that now."

Meanwhile, Ald. Ben Nobleman of the metropolitan Toronto borough of York has called for federal party leaders to reintroduce the issue of capital punishment in the fall session of the Commons.

He said in an interview Wednesday that he has sent telegrams to Prime Minister Trudeau, opposition leader Joe Clark and Ed Broadbent, New Democratic Party leader, urging them to show initiative in restoring capital punishment.

Mel Lastman, mayor of the borough of North York, has opened a fund for the parents of the slain boy.

Manuel had been working as a shoeshine boy on Yonge Street for about a month and gave the money he earned to his parents.

"I didn't realize how bad a place it was," Maria Jaques, Manuel's mother, said. "Close it down for all mothers to protect their sons."

BOYCOTT THREATENS

OTTAWA (CP) — The executive of the 2.2-million-member Canadian Labor Congress (CLC) agreed Wednesday to support a national boycott of the products of Robin Hood Multifoods Ltd. unless the Montreal company soon reaches a settlement with its 120 striking workers.

Andre L'Heureux, vice-president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, which represents the striking workers, said after a meeting with the CLC executive that no date for the beginning of the boycott had been set.

The union would decide by the end of the week whether a settlement might be reached. If none is reached, the union will push ahead with plans for the boycott.

Toronto trading

TORONTO (CP) — A partial recovery in oil and pipeline issues left the Toronto stock market fractionally lower at the close of light trading Wednesday.

Analysts attributed the lessened decline to a report from Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. that a construction delay in the Arctic pipeline route as advised by the Lysak inquiry would not seriously postpone the line's completion. One analyst said the turnaround at trades with 40,000 shares at $12.50 a share.

New York, where the Dow Jones index closed down 1.39 to 886.00 after an earlier drop of almost 10 points, added to the recovery at Toronto.

A total of 284 contracts were traded on the options market, up from 175 Tuesday.

Cassiar Asbestos Corp. Ltd. was second with 15,000 shares at $9.25 a share, while 10,000-share blocks tied for third place. Ten-thousand shares of BP Canada Ltd. traded at $13.94 a share.

Trudeau 'soft-money' man

NEW YORK (CP) — The Wall Street Journal says the weaker Canadian dollar is a sign that the money markets are telling Prime Minister Trudeau that they have "even less confidence" in his economic management than in that of the current U.S. administration.

The financial newspaper devotes a half-column editorial to the Canadian economy and the demise of the Canadian dollar, now worth about 93 U.S. cents, the lowest level it has reached during the seven years it has been floating.

The Journal says that Trudeau "seems to be even more of a soft-money man" than U.S. Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal or White House budget director Bert Lance.

"But we have a feeling that Mr. Trudeau's complacency is not shared by many of his fellow Canadians... Canada isn't doing so well. Its economy has been tangled up by a government effort to apply compulsory wage and price controls for nearly two years. The experiment has been marked by strikes and a flagging growth in production."

Foreign direct investment has dried up and inflation is currently at a higher rate than in the U.S., the newspaper notes.

"While the nation's troubles are frequently attributed to the rise of the Quebec separatists, it would be more accurate to say that the rise of the Quebec separatists is closely related to the country's economic mismanagement."

Given these circumstances, says the Journal, "it might be suspected that Mr. Trudeau is whistling in the dark when he voices unconcern."

Ottawa spent $50 million in July currency support

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian dollar ended a week of steady decline on New York money markets Wednesday.

At the close of trading, it was worth 93.30 (U.S.) cents, up slightly from Tuesday's close of 93.14.

Although the dollar fell in terms of U.S. currency earlier in the day, it did not drop below Tuesday's low of 92.99 (U.S.) cents.

A Royal Bank official said the small rise in value came about because there had been "more commercial buying of Canadian dollars than selling in the past day-and-a-half."

In Ottawa, figures released by the finance department Wednesday showed the federal government spent $50 million of its U.S. dollar holdings last month to help maintain the value of the Canadian dollar.

The Bank of Canada, acting for the government, keeps its intervention in exchange markets secret.

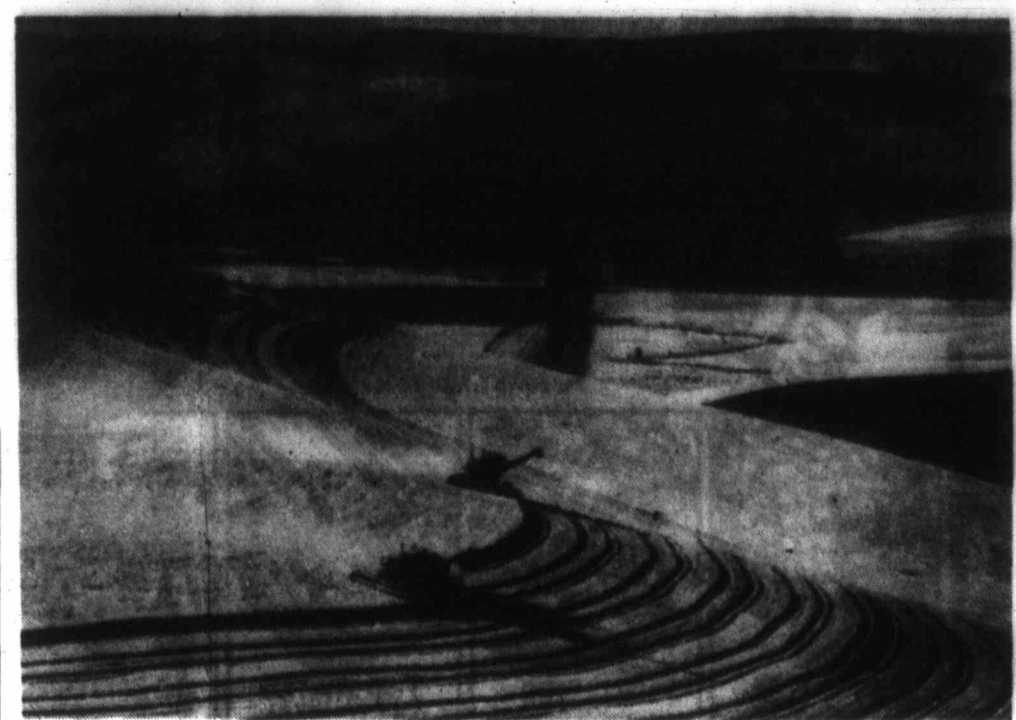

Aussies shave dollar again

SYDNEY (Reuters) — Australia devalued its dollar by 1.31 per cent against a basket of foreign currencies Wednesday in an attempt to halt increasing erosion of the country's gold and foreign-exchange reserves.

The Australian Reserve Bank announcement means the dollar has been effectively devalued by a net 13.5 per cent in the last eight months, and some economists said a further downward move will be needed.

A government official in Canberra described the devaluation as an adjustment to the drop in the value of the U.S. dollar — the main currency of Australia's international trade — against the Japanese yen.

Heat wilts Washington wheat crop

Hot spring and even hotter summer has cut into grain field yields in Washington, normally a major producer of wheat. Harvest, underway in this photo taken in Walla Walla county, is three weeks ahead of normal and anticipated crop for state is 91 million bushels, away off last year's bumper 144 million bushels.

B.C. business getting better

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Employers' Council of British Columbia says business conditions in B.C. are improving slightly.

The council's prognosis is based on the results of a semi-annual survey, released Wednesday, that covered 175 firms employing 183,000 people.

Council president William Hamilton said the responses of those surveyed indicate the most optimistic outlook since the economic slowdown in 1975.

"It is, though, still a far cry from the 45 per cent who found conditions good in the first half of 1974, the end of the last really good period," said Hamilton. "Cautious optimism best characterizes their position."

Hamilton said survey respondents were more positive about their own industry than business in general. Nineteen per cent rated the first half of 1977 good in their own industry while only six per cent reported business in general to be good, he said.

He said 81 per cent expect the general business climate to be good or fair during the remainder of the year, compared with 72 per cent earlier in the year.

Hamilton said the survey indicates positive signs in labor-management relations. Nineteen per cent expect an improvement in this area, compared with eight per cent in the last survey six months ago, he said.

The report says relatively less new capital expenditure is anticipated for the province over the next year than was anticipated six months ago but "these expenditure intentions are substantially more positive for B.C. than they are for Canada."

New capital expenditure refers to investment at a new location and/or investment at existing locations for a new product or service.

The report also says the most important factor affecting the output or operations of B.C. firms continues to be slack demand according to more than 75 per cent of the respondents. Federal and provincial government policy ranked second and third and the Anti-Inflation Board did not appear to be a major factor affecting output.

Pronovost to coach Sabres

One National Hockey League club announced the signing of a new coach Wednesday and another was expected to follow suit today.

Buffalo Sabres hired former NHL defenceman Marcel Pronovost and will introduce him at a press conference today. Meanwhile, Los Angeles Kings were expected to announce former NHL player and coach Ron Stewart as the man to replace Bob Pulford at the Kings' helm.

Pronovost, who last season coached Hull of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, spent 15 years with Detroit Red Wings and six with Toronto Maple Leafs.

While at Toronto from 1965-70, he played under the Sabres' present general manager, Punch Imlach. Pronovost has four years of minor league coaching experience.

Pulford resigned as the Kings' coach following the 1976-77 season after five years in the position. He has since signed to coach and manage Chicago Black Hawks.

McCormick surprised by Picken

OTTAWA (CP) — Eight winners in Wednesday's third round of men's singles competition will advance to quarter-final play today in the Canadian national tennis championships held this year at the Rideau Lawn Tennis Club.

Top-seeded Harry Fritz of Toronto beat Glenn Michibata, also of Toronto, 6-1, 6-1 and seventh-seeded Bob Puddicombe of Vancouver defeated fellow Vancouverite Ian Pomeroy 6-7, 6-2, 6-2.

Third-seeded Richard Legendre of Quebec City defeated Calgary's Nick Mohtadi 7-5, 6-2. Vancouver's Bob Bettauer beat Peter Sutcliffe of Montreal 6-3, 6-3. Ottawa's Jim Boyce, defending champion, held off Vancouver's Tony Bardsley 2-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Vancouver's 10th seeded John Picken pulled a surprise win over fourth-seeded former Victorian Don McCormick of Vancouver 6-7, 7-5, 6-3. Toronto's Dave Brown defeated Mike Puc of London, Ont., 6-2, 6-2, and in a marathon three-hour set, Toronto's Dale Power beat Montreal's Francois Synaghe 6-4, 4-6, 7-5.

On the women's side, top-seeded Marjorie Blackwood of Ottawa beat Toronto's Sally Coles 6-2, 7-5 in the second round of singles play.

Montreal's Andrea Martin beat Oakville's Judy Pridham 6-1, 6-0. Another Montrealer, Nicole Marois, defeated Vancouver's Gabrielle Slezakova 6-2, 4-6, 7-5.

Richest bonspiel planned

EDMONTON (CP) — The richest bonspiel in curling history, the $50,000 World Open Tournament of Champions, will be staged here Oct. 20-23.

A news conference was told Wednesday that several European teams, including world champion Ragnar Kamp of Sweden, are expected to attend. Other prospects are former world champion Otto Daniell of Switzerland and Bill Muirhead of Scotland, runner-up in 1976 to Bruce Roberts of the United States.

Roberts and another American star, Bud Somerville, are high on the list of possibilities.

A modified triple-knockout competition is scheduled in the event, to be run off at the Shamrock Curling Club.

Officials said 64 rinks will be entered, with 16 surviving a qualifying round for the final three days. The winning team will get $20,000 and the runner-up $8,000.

Red Wings succumb to wooing by Detroit

DETROIT (UPI) — Detroit Red Wings succumbed Wednesday to intense wooing by Mayor Coleman A. Young and abandoned the suburbs in favor of a 30-year agreement making them the prime and controlling tenants in a downtown riverfront arena. Young got what he wanted: the National Hockey League franchise playing its games in the city's posh Ice Palace, already under construction next to Cobo Arena, rather than a site across the road from the Pontiac, Mich., Silverdome where the Detroit Lions play football.

The Red Wings got what they desired — control of the site of their games. As sweeteners Young gave management of the new arena, Cobo Arena and a 2,000-car parking structure to the team which manages Olympia Stadium, the NHL team's current home.

The 20,000-seat facility plus 11,000-seat Cobo Arena will be leased to the Olympia Stadium management team for 30 years, with options for another 30 years included.

In return, the city will get $450,000 annually in rent plus an additional $2 million in revenues from the attached parking structure plus a 50-cent surcharge on each ticket for each arena event.

The city projects, conservatively it says, $3.5 million in revenues each year for use in paying off the $2.2 million it will need to retire bonds for the arena and parking facility.

"Basically, it was a solid business decision," said Red Wings' owner Bruce A. Norris, a wealthy grain shipping executive.

Pair of eagles lift Debbie into European lead

SUNNINGDALE, England (AP) — Debbie Austin fired two eagles on Sunningdale's pock-marked golf course Wednesday and scored a six-under-par 68 for a one-shot lead in the first round of the $100,000 European women's open. Veteran pro Judy Rankin and South African Sally Little were tied for second place at 69. Austin eagled the 10th and

16th holes as she came home in 34, four under par. She laid on a two-iron to the 10th green and sank a 10-foot putt for her first eagle. At the 16th she made a similar approach shot with a three-iron and again rolled in the putt. "I'm not like Judy Rankin," she said. "I'm not a good fairways wood player. I have to do the best I can with irons. I can't remember ever having two eagles in one round before." Austin had three bogeys on her round. One was at the 17th where she spoiled her back-nine figures by three-putting.

Rankin, winner of the inaugural tournament here in 1974, went off the fairway only once in her five-under-par round, and never needed more than two putts.

Oakville, Ont., native Sandra Post, now living in Boynton Beach, Fla., encountered problems with nines of 38-39 — 78 and was 30 strokes behind the leader.

Dolphins open Sunday

Victoria Dolphins open their Big Four Junior football schedule Sunday in Vancouver against Surrey Rams but home fans will have to wait another two weeks to see the club.

Dolphins play the opener at Empire Stadium, then meet Vancouver Blue Bombers there Aug. 14, according to the 1977 league schedule.

The Dolphins' home opener is Sunday, Aug. 21, at Royal Athletic Park, when Renfrew Trojans are the visitors.

Following the home opener, Dolphins are home for three consecutive Sundays, returning to Vancouver Sept. 11 to meet Renfrew.

All games are scheduled for the afternoon, with a 2 p.m. starting time for games here and 2:30 at Empire Stadium.

Semi-finals are scheduled for Oct. 15, with finals slated for Oct. 21.

The schedule:

HOME	AWAY
Aug. 21, 2 p.m. — Renfrew Trojans	Aug. 21, 2 p.m. — North Shore Cougars
Sept. 3, 2 p.m. — Metrolina	Sept. 3, 2 p.m. — Surrey Rams

Boxla ace accepts scholarship

BURNABY (CP) — Dan Wilson, the leading scorer this season in the Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League, says he has accepted an athletic scholarship at North Carolina State University.

The 20-year-old forward said he believes he's the first box lacrosse player from Western Canada to receive a scholarship from a United States university.

Wilson said the Wolfpack already has two other Canadian players — forward Stan Cockerton and goaltender Bob Flintoff, both former members of Oshawa Green Gaels.

Don Mattinson, Wilson's coach this season at Burnaby Cablevision, said Wilson is familiar with the variety of field lacrosse played in U.S. colleges because he played two seasons in high school.

Wilson has scored 70 goals in 26 league games this season for Burnaby, which has suffered just one loss.

Sutter home for tests

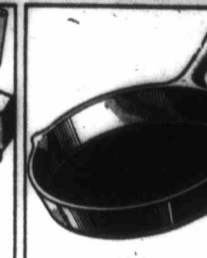

CINCINNATI (AP) — Bruce Sutter, Chicago Cubs relief specialist, returned to Chicago Wednesday to undergo a series of tests on sore back muscles of his right shoulder.

A National League baseball club spokesman said Sutter, who leads the major leagues with 24 saves and has a 1.06 earned run average, had ailing muscle flare up again. He said the 24-year-old right-hander may have a torn muscle.

Sutter suffered the injury prior to the All-Star game.

Young Canadian surprises U.S. Olympic gold medalist

MONTREAL (CP) — Peter Szmidt, 15, of Pointe Claire, Que., electrified the Canadian swimming championships Wednesday by overtaking American Olympic star Mike

Bruner in the final 100 metres to win the 400-metre freestyle final in Canadian record time. Szmidt's clocking of three minutes, 38.55 seconds, erased the old mark of 4:00.14 by Stephen Badger of Winnipeg. It was also five seconds better than the Pointe Claire teenager swam in the qualifying heats and 10 seconds faster than his personal best before Wednesday.

Bruner, 21, of Stockton, Calif., a gold medalist at last year's Olympic in the 200 butterfly, finished second in 3:58.63 while Bill Sawchuk of Thunder Bay, was third in 3:59.67.

Szmidt was seventh after the first 100 metres, but consistently closed the gap between himself and the leaders. He began to overtake the American after 300 metres, pulled alongside coming out of the final turn and duelled Bruner head-to-head the final 50 metres, just touching first at the wire.

The win was the most important of the young student's career and stamped him as a budding prospect for Canada in future international competition.

Stephen Pickell, 20, of Vancouver also set a Canadian record Wednesday, bettering his own record of 57.58 in the 100 backstroke with a 57.36 timing.

Pickell's time was the fastest in the world this year for the 100 backstroke. He now plans to return to Vancouver for the rest of the summer, passing up a chance to compete in the U.S. nationals later this month in Mission Viejo, Calif.

Other individual winners Wednesday included Cheryl Gibson of Edmonton in the women's 100-metre backstroke, Shannon Smith of New Westminster in the women's 400 freestyle, Christine Hodson of Ottawa in the women's 200 breaststroke and Graham Smith, 18, of Edmonton in the men's 200 breaststroke.

Gibson, 18, was timed in 1:04.22 to win her final with her South Side Swim Club teammate Wendy Hogg touching second in 1:05.52.

Gibson, also duelled Shannon Smith most of the way in the 400 freestyle before finishing a close second to the New Westminster swimmer. Smith's winning time was 4:15.61, while Gibson touched in 4:16.44.

Hodson, 15, took the measure of a slow field in the women's 200 breaststroke, winning in 2:40.52, while Joann Baker, 16, of Thunder Bay was second in 2:40.96.

As for Graham Smith, he cruised to an easy win in the men's 200 breaststroke in 2:20.35, just shy of his own Canadian mark of 2:19.42. Nevertheless, his time was the fastest in the world this year for the event; a Soviet, Vlad Tarasov, had recorded the previous best of 2:20.60.

Flyers sign draft picks

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Forwards Tom Gorence and Dave Hovda, selected second and third by Philadelphia Flyers in this summer's amateur draft, have been signed to multi-year contracts.

Gorence, a right winger, scored 18 goals and 19 assists in 29 games with University of Minnesota last season. Hovda received 220 penalty minutes with Portland in the Western Canada Junior Hockey League last season. He also had 16 goals and 26 assists.

Junior signs with Expos

MONTREAL (CP) — Left-hander Ricky Williams, the 20-year-old son of Montreal field manager Dick Williams, has been signed to a professional baseball contract by the Expos of the National League. Williams, who is six feet, one inch and weighs 185 pounds, pitched for University of Southern Alabama.

Wrigley inventory totals $81.3 million

CHICAGO (AP) — An estate of $81.3 million was left by chewing gum magnate and Chicago Cubs owner Philip K. Wrigley at his death on April 12, a court inventory showed Wednesday.

The inventory was the first detailed listing of items in the estate, previously estimated at being worth between $60 million and $100 million. It included $61 million in personal property and $200,000 in real estate.

The inventory listed a total of 30 separate stock holdings, including 751,182 shares of capital stock in the William Wrigley Jr. Co. and 4,017 shares of common stock in the Cubs.

Various goods and chattels are to be covered in a supplemental inventory to be filed later. Wrigley's home in Chicago and Wrigley Field, the Cubs' home, were the only pieces of real estate listed in the inventory filed in circuit court by Wrigley's son, William Wrigley, the estate's executor.

Foreign yacht cup trials start today

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Australia, the newest of the 12-metre yachts from down under, and Sverige of Sweden will meet today in the first division and Gretel II of Australia and France I will meet in the second division in the first day of trials to determine the foreign challenger to the America's Cup.

Conducting the drawing Wednesday was Baron Marcel Bich of France, honorary commodore of the Yacht Club D'Hyeres, the challenger of record.

Baron Bich said he would be racing France I rather than France II, his newest 12 metre. "France I is faster in light air. There's no doubt about that."

The foreign trials, which extend through Sept. 8, will determine which of the four foreign challenges, a record number for the America's Cup, will be accepted by the New York Yacht Club to race one of three American boats in the final which begins Sept. 11.

Because of the record number of foreign entries, the round-robin challenge series is being run in divisions. Two races will be run over the same course simultaneously, with the first-division boats starting 10 minutes ahead of the second pair.

Australian Alan Bond, owner of Australia, said he would not take the helm of his yacht, as he did three years ago when he unsuccessfully challenged with Southern cross. He added that this was no pleasure trip for him.

"This is not fun; this is deadly serious," said Bond. "And don't ever get the idea this is fun."

The Baron also said he would not take the helm of his yacht today. Pierre Delfour will be at that post.

"We are late," the Baron said. "We had to abandon France II and did not have a chance to prepare France I. Now we have to have them both prepared. If France I wins the eliminations, we could go with France II in the finals. That is permissible."

Bond said he also felt France I would be a threat and that "she is very fast in light wind."

"She is not to be underestimated," he said.

Keegan helps new club in win over Liverpool

HAMBURG, West Germany (Reuter) — Kevin Keegan led SV Hamburg to a 3-2 win over his former club Liverpool in an international soccer match Wednesday night.

SV Hamburg led 1-0 in the first half against the English League First Division team when Keegan scored in the 19th minute before 55,000 fans. Hamburg paid Liverpool, last season's European Cup champions, more than $900,000 for Keegan.

In the 63rd minute, Keegan passed to Magath, whose harmless shot slipped through the hands of England goalkeeper Ray Clemence to make it 2-0 for the 1976 winners of the European Cup Winners' Cup.

But Liverpool rallied and tied the score on goals by David Johnson and David Fairclough in the 63th and 66th minutes respectively.

Ferdinand Keller scored the winning goal in the 80th minute.

Bells' return suits sailors

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — U.S. Navy men hailed the return of the old-time sailor suit for lots of reasons this week — one being simply that those nifty, hip-hugging bell bottoms and that cocky white hat make a sailor look like a sailor when he struts down the gangplank.

Ask the man who'll be wearing one.

"That was one of the main reasons I joined the navy, and after I joined I found out they were no longer authorized," said Robert Moore Jr., of Syracuse, N.Y., a third-class petty officer at the Great Lakes Naval Station.

"That was the look of the navy."

Aye, said Bill Lukonis, a second-class petty officer at the Atlantic Fleet's sprawling Norfolk, Va., base.

"I like the old uniform better because that's what the Navy is. Since I've been home on leave in the new uniform people ask what service I belong to. They identify with the old uniforms. They still have commercials with people in it."

Moore and Lukonis, like all Navy enlisted men and petty officers, now wear the "new" officer-type uniform — standard blue trousers and double-breasted jacket, white shirt, black tie, billed officer-style cap — that replaced the traditional jumper and bell bottoms in 1971.

The navy disclosed this week that Admiral James Holloway, chief of naval operations, has decided to shift the bottom four enlisted ranks — seaman recruit through petty officer third class — back into the old uniform in order to boost morale and save money.

Bellbottoms
... winging change

A navy spokesman in Washington said 80 per cent of the sailors surveyed this year favored a return to the bells on grounds the officer-type uniform was too hard to keep clean and sharp and too difficult to store in lockers.

But image always has figured in the swabbies' gripes about the shift to stuffy officer-type uniforms, ordered by Chief of Naval Operations Elmo Zumwalt in 1971. Zumwalt thought putting everyone in the same style uniform would boost morale by stressing the egalitarian image for the modern navy.

Under Holloway's order, the navy will start the shift back to bells with a one-year test, among some 20,000 sailors.

Academic-technical wall worries college

By PAUL DEGROOT
Colonist Reporter

The battle for "comprehensive" education in community colleges appears to have been lost with the introduction of the new Colleges and Provincial Institutes Act. Camosun College council vice-chairman I. A. Greenwood said Wednesday.

Mrs. Greenwood said the legislation appeared to set academic and technical programs completely apart from each other, but some college educators would like to see trades students get some exposure to the humanities, arts, and sciences during their training.

The division between academic and technical programs could be mitigated if the regulations drawn up to enforce the legislation allow students some flexibility in arranging their training programs, Mrs. Greenwood said.

By not setting any restrictions on the student body of colleges the bill is very student-oriented, she added. Excessive regulation of students, by setting a minimum age for entry, for instance, could restrict student freedom.

"It has left the students free, and I like that," Mrs. Greenwood said. Student freedom could be enhanced if provincial adjudication of programs through three provincial councils makes possible greater transferability of courses taken at different institutions, and permits students to attend any college they wish, even one outside their own areas, without penalty.

The three councils, one each for occupational training, academic programs, and college management, could be a disaster "if they build up their own bureaucracy," Mrs. Greenwood said.

She expressed concern particularly about the management advisory council, made up of the principals of all of the colleges and ministry representatives.

"We appoint a principal to run the college, and then he goes down to his own council and tells us how much money we have to work with."

The time spent on the management advisory council also cut into principals' responsibilities to their colleges, according to Mrs. Greenwood.

"A lot depends on who the government appoints to the other two councils," she said. "It looks to me as though they are moving the money decisions away from direct government and political control."

Assuming that the councils themselves do not become politically involved, that will be welcomed by most institutions, although those with the most influence in the education ministry might not like the new arrangement, she said.

The new legislation will greatly alter the Greater Victoria school board's say at Camosun. Instead of the five members which it now appoints to the college council (which will become a college board under the new legislation), it will appoint only one.

Sooke and Saanich school districts currently do not participate in Camosun College governance or finance, but they may become part of the college region in the future, and thus be eligible to have representatives on the college board.

If the Gulf Islands school district were included in the new college region, and if the Cowichan school district were to exercise its right to send a representative to both Malaspina and Camosun, five school boards could be represented on the board. The province would appoint four representatives, bringing the number of board members to nine, down only slightly from the present ten-member college council, Mrs. Greenwood said.

Dr. Hal Knight, former Camosun College council chairman, and still a member of the council, said he saw little in the legislation which could be attributed to a report which he submitted to the ministry of education this spring on behalf of the B.C. Association of Colleges.

The report recommended, among other things, that college councillors (now board members) be elected, but the new legislation makes it theoretically possible for none of the members on a college board to be elected, and also makes the appointment of a board chairman the right of the provincial government, rather than of other members on the board.

Knight said the main changes are the provision to make colleges corporations, which will permit them to borrow money on their own, and the new administrative arrangement with three councils to supervise various aspects of all the province's colleges, removing much of the authority now exercised by local councils.

Tourist flow up sharply after slump

By BILL SMITH
Colonist Reporter

Tourist traffic through Victoria, well down in June, had a sharp upsurge in July.

Donald Nixon, manager of the Victoria Visitors' Information office, said Wednesday that traffic last month indicated "we've rounded the bend and are on the upsurge."

Most attractions, restaurants, hotels and motels, are reporting increases in business over the same period of last year anywhere from 10 to 20 per cent, he said.

"We started to surge about mid-June and haven't looked back since."

June proved to be a little better than June of 1976 when the flow of tourists, compared to previous years, dropped drastically. Doubling of fares on B.C. Ferries, the summer Olympics in Montreal and the United States bicentennial celebrations were all cited as contributing factors for the decline of tourist traffic to Canada.

The increase in traffic has meant that Nixon had to begin operating his hotel and motel reference system much earlier this year. Nixon said he had not had to set the system in operation in past years until August, but he had to start it last month because of inquiries for rooms.

His office makes daily checks with motel and hotel operators to find out who has rooms available for visitors arriving in the city without reservations.

He said the number of people coming into his Causeway office for information about the area showed a 16 per cent increase last month over the same month a year ago.

Although figures for July will not be available until next week, Nixon believes that passenger loadings aboard B.C. Ferries will show a sharp increase over the previous month and over July of 1976.

Nixon, who estimates value of the tourist industry to Victoria at $140 million, said the external advertising campaign embarked on this spring is reaping a rich harvest.

The program has resulted in a four-fold increase in the number of inquiries for information about Vancouver Island, he said.

One sector particularly grateful for the tourist boom are the motel operators along the scenic Gorge, Nixon said.

"These people took an awful beating last year."

He does, however, agree with Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Alan Emery's call for a detailed study of a government-operated casino proposal.

"It's an idea certainly worthy of consideration," he said, stressing that the gambling enterprise should be developed along the lines of a Monte Carlo casino, rather than a Las Vegas operation.

Running low?

Police fund queried

Saanich council wants a detailed report from the police board on the state of its contingency fund.

The request was made Tuesday after aldermen were told the $10,000 fund might be depleted.

The situation came to light as council was discussing a request from the board for $1,000 to repair damage caused by a prisoner in the jail area of the Vernon Avenue police station.

The damage occurred in June, when a person left alone in an interview room kicked in a plaster wall. The plaster has since been replaced with plywood.

Finance committee chairman Ald. Ian Cass said the request should be held in abeyance pending a detailed explanation of all expenditures from the fund.

The amount placed in the fund was substantial and "we should be given a full accounting."

Ald. Sandy Noel said he was prepared to endorse the request on the grounds that "we have responsible people on the board."

Saanich chief puts tag on new Helmcken hospital

Fire protection: $100,000 a year

Saanich expects to be asked soon to provide fire protection for the new Helmcken Road hospital, and Fire chief Harold Gains will recommend to council that contract for the service be negotiated. He put the cost at more than $100,000 a year.

Gains said a new firehall should be built near the over-pass at Elk Lake Drive and Royal Oak Avenue, to replace the one now in operation on Hamsterly.

Protection for the 300-bed hospital could be provided from either the main firehall on Vernon Avenue or from the new Royal Oak building, Gains said.

Council's fire committee has recommended $10,000 be spent on working drawings for the proposed building.

The drawings will be done by William Turkington, a former lieutenant with the Saanich fire department who now works as a designer.

Council was forced to seek new drawings because the five bids received earlier this year were all considerably higher than the estimated cost.

The decision to commission Turkington to design the building has drawn the ire of Victoria architect Peter Orme.

In a letter to the committee, to be discussed at a meeting next week, Orme says the municipality is violating the Architects' Act by allowing a former fireman to prepare working drawings for the new $250,000 firehall.

He said buildings costing more than $100,000 required "professional involvement."

According to the act, professional involvement implies the designer or architect must be licensed with the Architectural Institute of B.C.

Saanich plans hearing on Royal Oak industry

Saanich council will hold a public hearing next month on the controversial issue of an industrial park at Royal Oak.

Council Tuesday voted endorsement of a lands, planning and housing committee recommendation that a public hearing be held at the earliest possible date.

The hearing will deal only with the first phase of development which involves about 50 acres in the 140-acre tract of land under consideration.

The site is bounded on the north by Mann, east by the Pat Bay Highway and south by Kay and Vanalman.

In other business, council:

● Rejected a rezoning application by R. D. Baxter affecting land at Little Eldon Place, site of a proposed 12-unit apartment on 12,500 square feet near Rudd Park.

The advisory planning commission recommended rejection on the grounds that the development was incompatible with the existing single-family use and because it could have a deleterious effect on possible future development in the area.

Council was told the draft official community plan indicated the area would gradually redevelop to a higher density, but the character of the neighborhood, condition of the houses and the size of the site indicated the proposed use was inappropriate at this time.

● Sent to public hearing an application by Munro Development to rezone land on Quadra from detached housing to general commercial.

It is proposed to erect a two-storey office-retail building on the 12,000-square-foot site.

Extreme fire hazard shuts Bear Hill Park

Extreme fire hazard conditions have prompted the Capital Region to close Bear Hill Park in Central Saanich starting today.

According to a spokesman Wednesday, the closure will remain in effect until the hot, dry weather conditions subside.

Bear Hill is the first of the Capital Region's 10 parks to be closed because of the fire threat. East Sooke Park will likely be closed soon if the weather conditions don't change, according to the spokesman.

Bear Hill is of special concern to the region because it has no access routes to its summit in the event of a fire.

As yet there have been no fires in any of the region's parks this season.

"We've been very fortunate because of the conscientiousness of the people using the parks," the spokesman said.

Dispute remains up in air

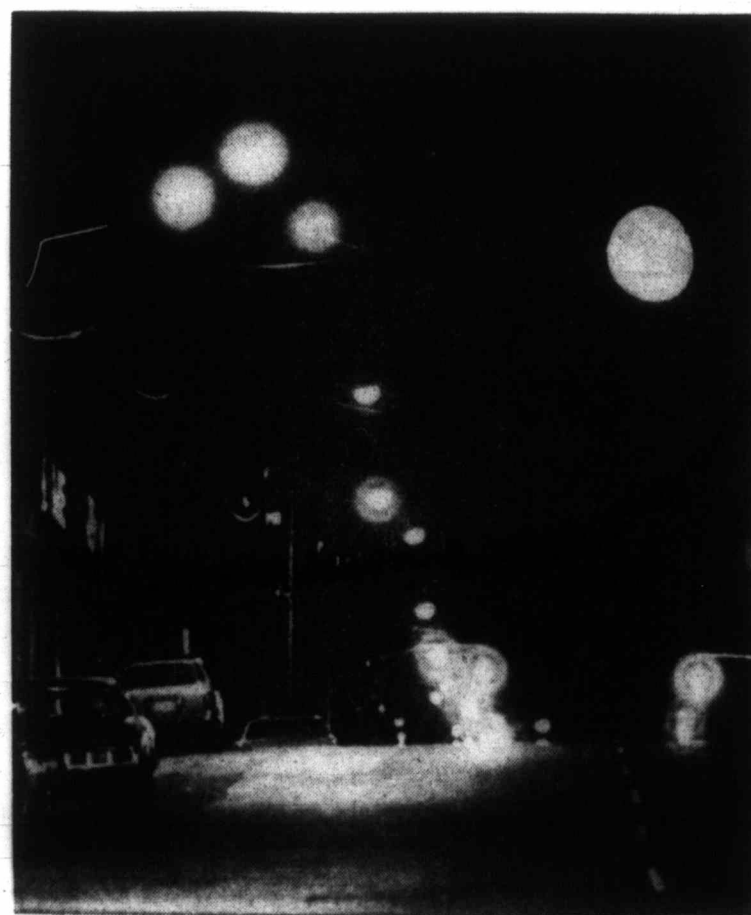

No new developments were reported Wednesday in the dispute that has partially disrupted AirWest Airlines Ltd. service since last Friday.

Management personnel said they were still maintaining regular service between Victoria and Vancouver and on the Victoria-Seattle run. However, the seaplane service from Vancouver to Nanaimo, Duncan and Powell River was reported "out for a few days."

Employees, members of the Teamsters Union, walked off the job Friday to take part in a "study session" as a result of the firing of a co-pilot who had failed a route check examination.

The union charged that the co-pilot had only been with the company two weeks and hadn't been prepared for such an examination.

The union and company are also involved in a contract dispute that threatens to break into a full-fledged strike momentarily. However, both sides say the current work stoppage is being treated as separate from the main dispute.

Weigh-in stations and anglers who list both coho and chinooks on one King Fisherman entry form are holding up appearance of the daily lists in the Colonist.

For purposes of the hidden weight draws, Prince Crest awards and statistical records, each species of fish must be entered on different entry forms.

When chinooks and coho come in on the same form, the King Fisherman Contest secretary has to separate them by making out new forms for one of the species.

With coho, chinooks and pinks (which are entered as chinooks), along with a few sockeye, biting like crazy in Sooke to Pedder Bay waters these days the work of transferring the dual-entry forms is mounting and recording of the daily list, which provides the fishing information for anglers seeking a place to fish, is being delayed.

Please remember: one entry form for each category of fish in the King Fisherman Contest.

Majestic Lipizzans as moving as ballet

The world famous Royal Lipizzan stallions are returning to Victoria's Memorial Arena Monday for their popular annual show. Anyone who has ever admired the horse for its beauty and ability cannot fail to appreciate the highly trained majestic white stallions, as they execute difficult dressage movements.

Lipizzans do not begin training until they are four years old, and will only be fully trained at eight. As a result, the Lipizzaner may still be performing in the riding hall at 25.

All the stallions take part in the school on the ground, consisting of the stylized walks, trots, canter, pirouettes, and piaffe and passage, but only a few especially gifted stallions will master the great leaps of the school above the ground. Probably the most difficult and most spectacular of the movements above the ground is the Capriole: the stallion leaps up from the position of the piaffe with all four legs drawn high and kicks out energetically with the hind legs and for a moment his body is poised horizontally in the air. These precision dressage movements that the stallions demonstrate begin as a war-horse fighting tactic to help a knight when he was under attack by ground troops. Today it survives as an "art form of great subtlety and power, as abstract and as moving as the ballet." If you have ever admired the horse, you should not miss this show.

Miss Toni Berliner, of Sylmar, California judged Hunt Valley Farm's fourth annual CHSA horse show over the holiday weekend. A two day affair, all of the junior classes were held on Saturday, and open events on Sunday.

Almee Shold was the high point aggregate winner on the junior day, winning junior working hunter under saddle (16 and over), equitation basic seat (14 to 18), maiden equitation hunt seat, and combined with Karen Whyte on University Scholar and Shawn Garside on Wild Acres to win team of three junior hunters tandem. Almee was riding her horse, Allmay's Dream.

Another big winner was Kelly Sardone, who rode Boqui to first in junior working hunter under saddle (under 16), equitation hunt seat (14 to 18), CHSA hunter seat medal class, and junior working hunter. Jackie Robertson and Cocoa won pony working hunter and equitation hunt seat (11 to 14).

Allison Wells rode Champagne Charlie to first in pony working hunter under saddle. Equitation basic seat (11 to 14) was won by Shelley Dunsmaur and equitation basic seat (under 11) was won by Cathie Newman. Judy Baker won the maiden equitation basic seat class.

In English pleasure, Loretta Wells and Color Me Lucky were first. Marine Gee was first in equitation hunt seat (under 11). Riding Solid Oak, Caroline Gosling won junior working hunter (18' and over).

The two junior jumper classes open to riders under 14 were won by Susan Wait on Aye Aye Captain and Tim Wait on Apricot Brandy. Nancy McMillan on Hayden and Karen Whyte on University Scholar won the two junior jumper classes for riders 14 to 18. Karen Olson rode Desert to first in the junior jumper classic.

Lil Hawkins was a big winner at the open show, riding Moon Shadow to first in green working hunter under saddle, amateur owner working hunter under saddle, and novice working hunter under saddle. Alan Brand rode Modesto Slim to first place in Novice working hunter, green working hunter championship, and modified hunter classic.

Riding Solo Flight, Terry Hanna was first in amateur owner working hunter and green working hunter. Both small working hunter over fences and working hunter open were won by Kelly Sardone on Boqui. Stuart Balkin took first place in novice working hunter and amateur owner working hunter championship with Soft Gold.

Almee Shold and Allmay's Dream were first in English pleasure. The small working hunter under saddle class was won by Judy Ross on Shot O'Glory. Rob Duncan, riding Mad Moment, won gentlemen's hunter under saddle.

The Broadmead Equestrian Centre horsemanship class was won by Judy Thompson, riding Terrance Rataigan. There were three jumper classes held. Karen Olsen and Desert were first in the first jumper class (jumps to 3'6"). Barbara Kerr and Magnet won the next two classes (jumps to 3'9" and jumps to 4'). Trevor Graham and Barney won the jumper classic.

Bob Shanks of Victoria judged the Sooke Saddle Club's first all English schooling show, held at the Sooke Flats. April Irvin and Skip's Irish Dee won maiden English pleasure and English pleasure 15'2" and under. Riding Gil-Nih-Kwa, Alyson Smith was first in English pleasure over 15'2" and hunter under saddle over 15'2". Brenda Bailey and My Pal Joey were first in hunter saddle 15'2" and under, and open hunter hack.

Both warm up hunter and working hunter were won by Erin Collins on Yogi Bear. Sheila Vidal rode Penny's Pride to first in green hunter hack, green working hunter, equitation over fences, and open handy hunter. Riding Here Comes the Judge, Pam Holmes won pony English pleasure, and pony working hunter. Ann Mander and O'Malley won hunt seat equitation (under 17). Meryde Starck and Sonny Mountain won the show hack class.

The amateur carriage driving class was won by Linda Prior driving Rozelle. Both pleasure driving and barrel race for carriages were won by Alice Rawlins driving Lady Donovan.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I am writing on behalf of my husband. He recently made some remarks that horrified me. He later challenged me, saying that if I write to you, you will agree with him.

The problem is that he drinks anywhere from a six-pack to a case of beer each day. He smokes between one and a half to two packages of cigarettes a day. He contends that if he were to stop drinking all that beer, his nervous system could not take the change and it would hurt him. He also says that if he should stop smoking the same thing would apply.

He is 36 and a college graduate. He's retired by choice. Since I am not a college graduate he considers my opinions invalid, but he says he will trust your opinion.

Is he right about the beer drinking and cigarette smoking? He is in excellent health, and says that if his habits were going to hurt him, they would have done it by now. He has complete physicals periodically. — Mrs. D.L.

Your husband apparently did not take a course in abnormal psychology or logic in college. If he did I suspect he flunked.

You are using common sense. Both of his habits are being done to excess as a result of some compulsion on his part. The heavy cigarette smoking is most likely tied to his beer drinking — a particularly unhealthy combination.

He can call it nerves if he wishes, but even if he were to cut down either habit by half, his body, if it could, would respond with a rousing thank you. A productive hobby and some good exercise would be in order.

To conclude, I agree with you. At 36, he had better stop depending on unsound theorizing and look around at some of his classmates who have cached in their chips because of such longstanding habits. I suggest he take adult education classes to while away some of his retirement hours — preferably on preventive health care.

I'll wager he doesn't report his habits to his doctor during those examinations, which should, incidentally, include a chest X-ray.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I am 16-year-old girl who has had posture. When I try to correct it (by sitting or standing erect). I'm unable to breathe very well and my back hurts. Is there any other way to correct my posture? Sometimes in the morning the back part of my shoulder aches. Would a board under the bed —

Good posture is important for proper breathing and appearance. But from your description there seems to be more wrong with you than posture. You parents should arrange to have you seen by an orthopedic doctor to determine the cause of your posture and breathing problem and pain. I doubt that a bed board will help you.

Ann Landers

Dear Landers: I know you've heard of all kinds of mother-in-law problems but mine is about to drive me up the wall.

What can I do about a very sweet mother-in-law who insists on helping? When she is a dinner guest in our home, Mother G takes it upon herself to collect all the plates, and stacks them in front of herself after wiping each one with a piece of bread. The leftovers go on a platter! It's a most unappealing sight — looks like a collection of garbage. Mother G. also, Mother, my crystal globes to the kitchen, four at a time, as if they were jelly glasses.

What is there left to say after I have told her repeated, "Please, dear, I'd prefer that you didn't help"? — Ready to Blow a Gasket.

Dear Red: You can stop telling her (obviously she ignores verbal instructions) and let her know in a physical way that you will not permit her to do K.P. duty in your home.

When Mother G. begins to collect the plates, go after her immediately and lead her back to her chair—and don't let her get out of it. You may have to seat her two or three times, but she will get the message eventually and the problem will be solved.

Dear Ann Landers: I am one of millions of women who have facial hair. I've already spent over $400 on electrolysis. The ads were misleading. I thought after one treatment the hair would be gone for ever. No such thing. Some hairs are destroyed but other crop up nearby. Meanwhile, the spending goes on and on. My question: Are the do-it-yourself home kits any good? Do they remove hair permanently? They sound wonderful in the advertisements.

What do you say? — Sick of Tweezing.

Dear Tweez: Sorry, I can't give you the brand name because I stay away from endorsements, but one do-it-yourself hair-removal kit is really worth the money.

If — and not the big IF — you have patience, are somewhat skilled at handling equipment and if you follow the directions, the kit could be well worth the investment.

P.S. To one and all: Please don't write for the name. I won't give it. Ask a dermatologist. If he's knowledgeable, he'll know.

Dear Ann Landers: My mother died several months ago. She was not only a wonderful mother and wife but a great person who had a world of friends.

My father, who is 65, has started to take out a 35-year-old girl. What is it that makes people forget so soon? My mother gave 40 years of her life to my father. She did everything under the sun to please that man. I never once heard her utter a word of complaint although at times he was impossible.

I know he isn't seeing this young chick because he needs someone to take care of him. My father can cook, clean and cha-cha better than I can. He's self-sufficient and in excellent health. I resent my father for desecrating my mother's memory. What's more, I don't know what I'd do if I ever met that tramp face to face. Any suggestions? — Distracted Daughter.

Dear D.D.: Are you sure the woman is a tramp? Although the age difference is great she may be a mature, decent woman. Moreover, your dad sounds like a young 65.

I do not believe a widower who sets out to make a new life for himself is "desecrating his wife's memory." Life is for the living, dear.

Ottawa rejects northern split

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government has rejected native demands for separate Indian and Inuit governments in the Northwest Territories. The rejection was contained in a northern policy statement issued Wednesday that MP C. M. Drury, former Liberal cabinet minister, would conduct an inquiry into constitutional reform in the far-flung territory.

Legislative authority and governmental jurisdiction are not allocated in Canada on grounds that differentiate between the people on the basis of race," said the statement.

The N.W.T. Indian Brotherhood has demanded that Ottawa accept a land claim calling for creation of a Dene government in the Mackenzie River Valley. Dene means the people in a majority of valley native languages and the Dene government would not include non-natives.

A similar proposal has been advanced by Inuit Tapirisat, the national Eskimo brotherhood. It would create an Inuit territory covering the barren lands of the central and eastern N.W.T.

Unless the Dene and Inuit are seeking reserves under the Indian Act, the statement says, the government does not favor new political divisions "based essentially on distinctions of race."

The statement was issued by the prime minister's office. "Jurisdiction is placed in the hands of governments that are responsible, directly or indirectly, to the people — again, without regard to race."

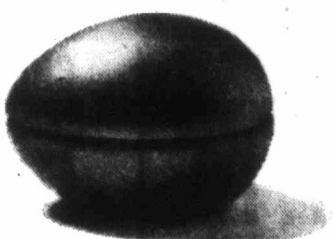

It called the Dene and Inuit positions "well beyond the policy the federal government is prepared to follow."

Both the Indians and Inuit have argued that they need territorial jurisdictions, with wide powers, to survive as distinct cultural groups.

Budget approved after 262 hours

The British Columbia Legislature Wednesday approved the 1977-78 budget of $3.5 billion after 262 hours and 18 minutes of debate — and only six months before the 1978-79 budget is due.

This year's budget was introduced Jan. 24 by Finance Minister Evan Wolfe. Lieut.-Gov. Walter Owen gave the bill Royal Assent shortly after 9 p.m.

Prior to this year's debate on estimates, a mutually agreed-to time limit existed for debate on the budget. But in 1975, the year of the last provincial election, the then Opposition, now the Social Credit government, argued that there should be no "closure" on debate on spending. The cry "not a dime without debate" became a key election issue in December, 1975.

when David Barrett's NDP government was defeated.

On taking office, Premier Bennett placed a motion on the order paper leaving the house free to lift the 135-hour time limit if it so desired. The NDP, now in Opposition, pushed debate on estimates to its limit and the 135 hour embargo, which they had always insisted was long enough, was lifted.

Wednesday, after 262 hours of often repetitive debate, both sides appeared satisfied that they'd proved their point. The government felt it had proved more than 135 hours was needed to debate spending. The NDP appeared confident that it had, by its delaying tactics, established the fact that the budget could have been passed 128 hours ago.

Juvenile-prints decision to be appealed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Victor Belknap, the B.C. superintendent of child welfare, has filed notice to appeal a B.C. Supreme Court decision to allow police to fingerprint juveniles without their permission.

Belknap said Tuesday he fears that the decision July 22 by Mr. Justice John Bouck will send police on "fishing expeditions" looking for juvenile suspects.

He said police who suspect a local gang of juveniles are responsible for a breaking and entering will fingerprint them all, hoping that a set of prints match those taken at the scene of the crime.

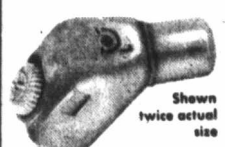

The decision by Bouck over-ruled a decision Feb. 22 by Juvenile Court Judge Winifred Murphy, who ruled that a juvenile suspect's fingerprints were not admissible in evidence because he had not consented to being fingerprinted.

Bouck ruled there is no analogy in law between taking fingerprint evidence from a juvenile and taking a written or oral statement from him. He added that even if the fingerprint evidence in the case before him was illegally obtained, it was still admissible in evidence since it was relevant and cogent.

The Bouck decision upholds the use of fingerprints as evidence, regardless of how they were obtained, said Belknap.

He added that the fishing expedition tactic could be used easily on juveniles, but if applied to adults they (police) "would very shortly be told where to go."

M. V. Chesnut's Garden Notes

I think I told you earlier this year about the letter I received asking if it was a good idea to keep picking off all the leaves from newly-planted rhubarb to "throw all the strength into the roots." I thought we had this kind of screwball nonsense stopped, but last week I had a letter from a reader whose neighbor had advanced an equally wacky suggestion.

My correspondent has a nice stand of corn in her backyard vegetable plot, and the tassels are just beginning to unfold. She was told to cut all these away as fast as they appear, to make for bigger and better cobs of corn! Fortunately, she decided to check with me first, otherwise she wouldn't have had any ears on her corn, or rather, there wouldn't be any kernels of corn on the cobs.

You see, those tassels are the male flowers of the corn plant, and without the falling or wind-blown pollen from those tassels, there can be no mouth-watering corn-on-the-cob from the plants.

The sticky silk threads which protrude from the tips of the ears are the female flowers. Each of these threads is connected directly to an embryo kernel within the ear, and each thread or silk must be fertilized by a grain of pollen from the male tassel, either from its own plant or from another plant nearby, before that kernel will swell and develop. Hence the importance of both tassels and silks.

It is a critical time in the life of a corn plant when the tassels appear and ripen, for this is when pollination takes place. If it is unsuccessful or incomplete, the cobs will form only partially or not at all. Insects play no part in the sex life of the corn plant — pollination is all done by the wind.

This is why a single row of corn in the garden will seldom produce a satisfactory crop. The wind, blowing across the row, carries the male pollen away from the waiting silks below, and these unfertilized threads wither away and die without producing any kernels.

Corn should always be grown in multiple rows or in square blocks so that pollen from one row will be reasonably sure to reach the silks of the next, and so on. Even with the correct placement of the plants, it is a fairly common thing to husk a cob of corn and find the tip bare, without kernels, due to imperfect pollination caused by some vagaries in the weather.

Another common point of contention between gardeners is whether or not the suckers should be torn off from the base of the stalks, and I have seen neighbors come close to blows over the sucker argument. Actually, the United States Department of Agriculture says it doesn't make a particle of difference whether you take 'em off or leave 'em on. Personally, I leave the suckers on.

I can see how these suckers could rob the parent plant of nutrients if the plant was growing on poor, hungry soil, but no gardener with all his marbles would ever consider planting corn on such ground. Corn is a hungry plant, and the richest, most heavily manured soil in the garden is none too good for it. Even in rich soil, corn should be given supplementary feeds of fertilizer along the rows during the growing season. Under this treatment, there should be food to spare for the suckers, and I figure their foliage contributes something to the health and general welfare of the plant.

Besides, the corn plant is extremely resentful of any root disturbance. It is pretty hard to twist the suckers off without shifting the roots a trifle, and this could easily be enough to start the plant sulking and thereby delay the crop for as much as a week or ten days.

It is obvious, too, that the big Iowa and Nebraska farmers, who grow corn by the square mile, don't go round snatching the suckers off by hand!

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — One of President Carter's main priorities is to cut the White House staff by 28 per cent in order to save $6 million. The president would like to reduce the number of people working in the White House from 485 to 351, and while all the details have not been worked out, many of the staff members will have to double up on jobs if Mr. Carter expects to meet his quota.

While the plans aren't firm this is how the reorganization now looks on paper.

Jody Powell, the press secretary, will still continue briefing the media in the morning. But in the afternoon he will be put in charge of the White House dog kennel. Mr. Carter believes that Mr. Powell's experience with the press makes him the obvious choice for feeding and watering the animals.

Hamilton Jordan, the president's assistant, will also take on the duties of cutting the lawn, seeing that the bushes around the White House are trimmed, and will watch the tourists as they move through the public rooms of the White House to make sure they don't take anything away as souvenirs.

Bert Lance, the head of the Office of Management and Budget, will double as head cashier of the White House Employees Credit Union.

Mr. Lance, who formerly headed a bank in Atlanta, Ga., will have the authority to make loans as high as $150 without taking it to the secretary of the treasury.

Walter Mondale will continue as vice president, when needed. But he will take on the further responsibility of running the transportation pool and seeing that all the cars at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue are gassed up and in working order.

Joan Mondale will work as housekeeper at Blair House, making sure it is always ready for a visit from a head of state. Assisting her in this task will be the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who will be ferried over from the Pentagon to sweep and make beds and prepare breakfast when an important guest is staying there.

Rosalynn Carter will be in charge of the upstairs at the White House, and Lillian Carter will be in charge of the downstairs. But the heavy cleaning will be done by members of the National Security Council.

Amy Carter will man the White House Situation Room when she finishes school each day, from four until midnight. Then she'll be relieved by her Uncle Billy, who will also be in charge of the wine cellar which is located in the same area.

Joe Califano's cook at HEW will be in charge of preparing state dinners, at which Mr.

and Mrs. Califano will be expected to serve when they are not invited there as official guests.

Andy Young will commute between the United Nations in New York and Washington three times a week to act as the White House doctor. In an emergency Amy Carter's nurse will handle minor surgery and dental work.

The President also plans to replace the crew members of Air Force One with his sister, Ruth Stapleton, as soon as she can get her pilot's license.

These are only a few of the changes now on the drawing board. To set an example the president also intends to double up on his own duties. While no one will comment on what he will do in this area, a visitor to the White House told reporters he was in the Oval Room recently when Mr. Carter was measuring Vice President Mondale for a new pair of pants.

Sydney Harris

Sex is perhaps the most difficult subject in the world to write about — because we can not agree on what we mean by it. That is to say, we cannot even agree on what we may be disagreeing about.

What is proper and improper in the area of sex? What is natural? What is moral and what is merely conventional? What is relative to our time and culture, and what is permanently and universally right or wrong?

No one yet knows the answers to these questions though many pretend they do — and would enforce their own answers upon the whole of the community, the country, or the world, if possible. There is far more authoritarianism in the realm of sex than in the field of politics.

I was leafing through Tennessee Williams' Memoirs the other evening, brushing up on the background of one of his plays I was about to review. In one chapter, he lingers lovingly and long on his homoerotic experiences with male hustlers, which I found tedious and tawdry and totally purposeless.

Then he breaks off and mentions that someone had phoned him about coming along to see the film, Last Tango in Paris.

"I was reluctant to go," Williams tells us, "because I had heard that it was pornographic."

He is apparently unconscious of the vast irony here, because nine readers out of ten would have deemed the whole previous chapter to be pornographic. Yet in his eyes it was merely amatory adventure.

Obscenity or pornography seems to be best defined as "whatever goes beyond the parameters I have set for myself." Or that my background has set for me.

You can be an absolutist about sex, or you can be a relativist. Whichever, you choose, you end up in absurdity or self-contradiction. Hardly anyone would want to go back to the primness and hysterical repression of the Victorian age, yet how far can we drift from it? And hardly anyone would want to go all the way with the child-seducers, yet where is the place we can intelligently and conscientiously draw the line?

If you pretend to know, you are fooling yourself. Sex is still largely terra incognita to the human race. Each culture and epoch gropes its own way, has its own taboos and absolutes, and turns them into absolutes. I happen to believe there are absolutes in sexual relations, but I cannot say with any certainty what they may be.

The root of the trouble seems to be that we have not yet adequately defined what a person is or ought to be — if he ought to be anything. When we get our generic identity right, we may get our sexual roles right.

Rise and fall of fads

Stuart Rosenberg

In our age, tomorrow is no longer the future; it is often the past. November magazines are outdated in October. This year's cars are last year's cars before the year is up.

Passing fads clamour for our attention and we invest our emotional strength in total response. We never seem to discover that we have wasted ourselves in one "flash in the pan" after the other. We're unaware that we've been robbed; robbed of our best energies, poured out in trivia.

Nor do most parents have a right to complain of their children, in this regard. Teenagers who go wild over frantic and foaming musical madmen, simply reflect the rock and roll civilization which their parents helped to create. There is only temporary consolation: today's stars of frenzied exhibition will soon fade and fall; they will be dumped on the highpiles of obsolete heroes.

But be ye prepared for short lived reprieve: Ere long a new meteor will zoom forth into the horizon and the idol worshippers of "the latest craze" will once again give their all to what is, in reality, nothing at all.

Rock and Roll is but the latest shape in which a social ills has taken form. It will be replaced over and over again by many other forms. The symptom, however, remains. And it is this: we put forth our first rate efforts on third rate causes. We lack the broader, inclusive loyalties to God and man. We have no staying power.

by Hallmark

We've lost the virtues of patience and endurance. We refuse to struggle, to lose, to wrestle, with our problems. We want the quick, the sure, the easy way. We yearn for facile, sudden, insured pleasure — because we've given up hope in anything bigger or better. Anything else appears to be obsolete, old-fashioned, out-of-style, because nobody's doing it.

Parents have themselves rebelled against authority and responsibility. Now they find themselves with responsibility but without authority. They have long ago given up their own personal commitments, their idealism, their spiritual values and traded them in for the shiny new models of fun and frolic. They have flitted from fad to fad, from one mania to another madman. They were living modern. Now their children have gone beyond them — they are post modern.

Teenagers are people in a state of searching. They surge forward in a passionate quest to identify with something. They want to belong to. If you give them a world in which nothing counts, wherein grown-ups are restless he-donks, who move from one fad to another, then expect to find them disturbed and disturbing, jumping without rhyme or reason, moving about, but getting nowhere.

Stewart & Gow,
880 Port Street,
Victoria, B.C.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS AND OTHERS
Estate of William John Poddie, Deceased.
Notice is hereby given that creditors and others having claims against the estate of the above named deceased, who died at Victoria, B.C., on May 19, 1977, are hereby requested to send them to the undersigned at 302 Royal Trust Building, Victoria, B.C., before the 6th day of September, 1977, after which date the Administrator will distribute the estate amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which he then has notice.

And all persons indebted to the said estate are required to pay their indebtedness to said Administrator forthwith.

I, J. H. MAURICE HORNE, O.C.,
Official Administrator
for the County of Victoria

ROBERT L. MONAGHAN, Solicitor for JAMES CANNING and RITA MAY KEAYS, Executors of the Will of Arthur Alfred Wright, deceased (also known as Arthur A. Wright and Arthur Wright).

CAPITAL REGIONAL DISTRICT
Pursuant to Section 766AA of the Municipal Act, the following text of By-law No. 374, cited as "Zoning By-law, Planning Area No. 3 (Salt Spring Island), Amendment By-law No. 24, 1977," is hereby published.

A BY-LAW TO AMEND ZONING BY-LAW NO. 66, PLANNING AREA NO. 3 (SALT SPRING ISLAND)

The Board of the Capital Regional District in open meeting assembled, enacts as follows:

1. By-law No. 66, cited as "Zoning By-law No. 1, Planning Area No. 3, (Salt Spring Island) 1970, is amended as follows:

By deleting from the Rural Zone and adding to the Commercial 1 Zone, Lot 5, Section 3, Range 3 East, Plan 11998, Salt Spring Island, Cowichan Land District, as shown on Plan 41 attached and forming part of this by-law.

A copy of the complete by-law may be viewed during normal working hours, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday inclusive, holidays excepted, at the Office of the Capital Regional District, 524 Yates Street, Victoria, B.C.

Dennis A. Young, Secretary.

2. An apartment building(s) to contain 50-60 units on Lot 2 (approximately 2.0 acres).

3. A two-story professional office building, the ground floor to be made available to Medical-Dental personnel and the upper floor to other professional services on Lot 3 (approximately 1.75 acres).

The Council has no intention of being involved itself in the construction and is merely the owner of the three lots which it is prepared to sell for the purposes stated subject to approval of the proposal to be erected thereon.

Developers are advised that the land will be cleared, will have water and sewer services to the lot line and will cost in the vicinity of $25,000 per acre. The Council will require on the West, North and East sides of the proposed development on Lot 1, an earth berm to be constructed by the developer and for each berm slopes to be graded.

Developers will require to commence within two years of the signing of an Agreement to Purchase and to complete the development within a further two years. Any proposal will, of course, require the land owned to be re-zoned and a Public Hearing, at which time the selected developers or agents should be prepared to attend and support the application. The rough plan attached hereto gives some indication of the sites involved and the application of the sites envisaged.

All sites fronting Mine Road and Campbell Way will have a 50-foot-wide buffer strip on which no parking or development will be permitted. Access is from Kingscome Place between and/or the Mine Road. There will be no access from Campbell Way.

A prospective developer may submit either a proposal for the whole or any one of the three proposed developments. Proposals marked "Tourist Facility," "Apartment Development" or "Professional Offices," in draft or sketch form should be in my hands no later than 4:00 p.m. on Friday, August 26, 1977.

Robert J. Smith,
Municipal Clerk.

Notice is hereby given that creditors and others having claims against the estate of the above named deceased, who died at Victoria, B.C., on May 19, 1977, are hereby requested to send them to the undersigned at 302 Royal Trust Building, Victoria, B.C., before the 6th day of September, 1977, after which date the Administrator will distribute the estate amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which he then has notice.

And all persons indebted to the said estate are required to pay their indebtedness to said Administrator forthwith.

Official Administrator
for the County of Victoria

ROBERT L. MONAGHAN, Solicitor for JAMES CANNING and RITA MAY KEAYS, Executors of the Will of Arthur Alfred Wright, deceased (also known as Arthur A. Wright and Arthur Wright).

CAPITAL REGIONAL DISTRICT
Pursuant to Section 766AA of the Municipal Act, the following text of By-law No. 374, cited as "Zoning By-law, Planning Area No. 3 (Salt Spring Island), Amendment By-law No. 24, 1977," is hereby published.

A BY-LAW TO AMEND ZONING BY-LAW NO. 66, PLANNING AREA NO. 3 (SALT SPRING ISLAND)

The Board of the Capital Regional District in open meeting assembled, enacts as follows:

1. By-law No. 66, cited as "Zoning By-law No. 1, Planning Area No. 3, (Salt Spring Island) 1970, is amended as follows:

By deleting from the Rural Zone and adding to the Commercial 1 Zone, Lot 5, Section 3, Range 3 East, Plan 11998, Salt Spring Island, Cowichan Land District, as shown on Plan 41 attached and forming part of this by-law.

A copy of the complete by-law may be viewed during normal working hours, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday inclusive, holidays excepted, at the Office of the Capital Regional District, 524 Yates Street, Victoria, B.C.

Dennis A. Young, Secretary.

2. An apartment building(s) to contain 50-60 units on Lot 2 (approximately 2.0 acres).

3. A two-story professional office building, the ground floor to be made available to Medical-Dental personnel and the upper floor to other professional services on Lot 3 (approximately 1.75 acres).

The Council has no intention of being involved itself in the construction and is merely the owner of the three lots which it is prepared to sell for the purposes stated subject to approval of the proposal to be erected thereon.

Developers are advised that the land will be cleared, will have water and sewer services to the lot line and will cost in the vicinity of $25,000 per acre. The Council will require on the West, North and East sides of the proposed development on Lot 1, an earth berm to be constructed by the developer and for each berm slopes to be graded.

Developers will require to commence within two years of the signing of an Agreement to Purchase and to complete the development within a further two years. Any proposal will, of course, require the land owned to be re-zoned and a Public Hearing, at which time the selected developers or agents should be prepared to attend and support the application. The rough plan attached hereto gives some indication of the sites involved and the application of the sites envisaged.

All sites fronting Mine Road and Campbell Way will have a 50-foot-wide buffer strip on which no parking or development will be permitted. Access is from Kingscome Place between and/or the Mine Road. There will be no access from Campbell Way.

A prospective developer may submit either a proposal for the whole or any one of the three proposed developments. Proposals marked "Tourist Facility," "Apartment Development" or "Professional Offices," in draft or sketch form should be in my hands no later than 4:00 p.m. on Friday, August 26, 1977.

Robert J. Smith,
Municipal Clerk.

VILLAGE OF PORT McNEILL
LETTERS OF INTENT REQUESTED

The Council of the Village of Port McNeill invites Letters of Intent from substantial developers for the construction of:

1. An extensive Tourist Facility comprising: motel/hotel complex, beverage room, banquet room, swimming pool, sauna, whirl-pool complex, coffee shop, cocktail lounge, general store, gas service station, or any similar project having a construction cost in the region of at least $2,000,000 on Lot 1 (approximately 5.5 acres).

2. An apartment building(s) to contain 50-60 units on Lot 2 (approximately 2.0 acres).

Grits weigh pipe fate

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal cabinet expects to make its decision on a northern natural gas pipeline by Monday, informed sources here said Wednesday.

The sources said the cabinet is scheduled to meet Friday night and again Saturday and Sunday to reach a consensus on whether a pipeline should be built, and if so, which route should be followed.

Meanwhile, Opposition Leader Joe Clark said Wednesday his Progressive Conservative Party agrees with the need for a pipeline and will support an Alaska-Yukon route to move Alaska gas to the lower 48 states of the United States.

The party reached agreement on its stand at a caucus meeting on the eve of the special two-day Commons pipeline debate, set to begin today.

After the debate ends late Friday afternoon, the Trudeau cabinet will begin its deliberations. A decision had been expected within a week to 10 days of the start of deliberations, but the sources said cabinet will meet throughout the weekend and expects to have made up its mind by Monday.

Clark called on the government to start immediate studies on possible routes to move the Canadian gas, including a pipeline along the nearly-completed Dempster Highway into the Northwest Territories.

The National Energy Board, in its recommendations to cabinet, said any approval of the Foothills' proposal should require the company to file an application by 1979 for a Dempster route.

But studies on the social, economic and environmental impact of a pipeline on the North say not enough information is available to make any recommendation on such a route.

The Conservative leader also agreed that a substantial payment should be made to the Yukon by either the United States government or the company involved to help make up for the impact such a project will have on the area.

Communities in the Yukon should have the right to tap into the pipeline to obtain any natural gas supplies they need, he said.

Clark said the party felt these "stringent" conditions should be imposed since the pipeline is not being built for Canadian benefit and the country is making its territory available to help the U.S. meet its needs.

U.S. government officials already have protested the proposals in Canada for a $200 million payment to offset the impact of a pipeline on the Yukon and the suggestions of route changes to pave the way for a future Canadian connection. Both measures would add to the cost of natural gas to U.S. consumers.

Clark saw little value in selecting any specific date to start construction.

The Lysyk inquiry on the social and economic impact of a pipeline on the Yukon said Tuesday that start of construction should be delayed to 1981 from Foothills' current proposal to start building a pipeline in 1979.

The proposal for the Foothills project also has support from the New Democratic Party, which earlier this year said it seemed the best available route.

Hostage-taker far from goal

TOKYO (Reuters) — A man who said he wanted to set a record for holding a hostage was in a hospital Wednesday night with a self-inflicted stab wound after he held a waitress at knifepoint in a restaurant for 22 hours. A man held 13 persons for 88 hours at a central Japan inn in June, 1968. He was jailed for life.

chirist before Filipchuk's next appearance in court. Mulligan said it was believed the accused man was on bail awaiting trial on a similar charge.

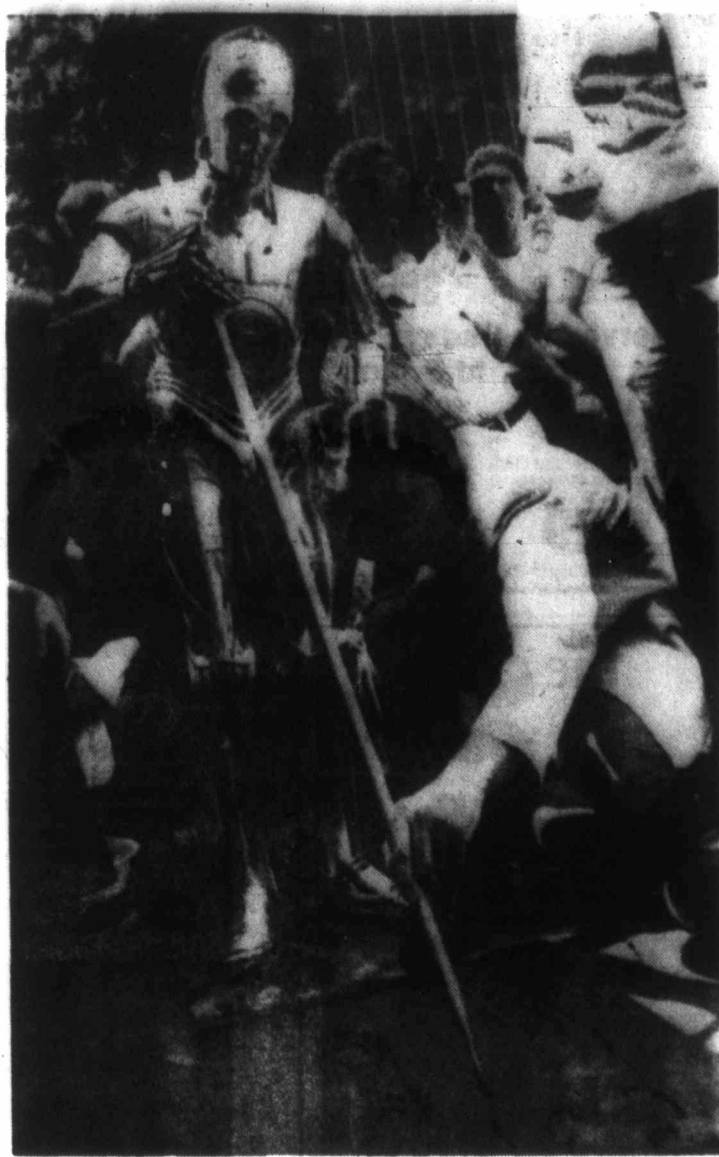

Michael David Filipchuk, who lives at the Salvation Army hostel at 521 Johnson, was charged in connection with an abortive, noon-hour holdup at the Toronto-Dominion Bank, 630 Yates, on Tuesday.

Insp. Angus Stewart, head of the Victoria city police detective division, said the attempt occurred at about 12:35 p.m. and was foiled when a woman teller left the would-be robber standing there as she walked over to another teller to inform her of what was happening. The second teller then walked into the manager's office to notify him of the holdup and a phone call was then placed to Victoria city police.

By the time police arrived on the scene, the man had departed but the suspect was arrested less than five hours later after police photos were shown to the first teller.

Filipchuk was remanded without plea until Friday for election of his trial method and a possible bail hearing. Crown counsel Robert Mulligan also informed the court he would seek psychiatric assessment by a forensic psychiatrist before Filipchuk's next appearance in court.

U.S. still ready to fight

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter would be prepared to use nuclear weapons to thwart any Communist attack on NATO members and would back efforts to regain any land lost through invasion, his chief spokesman said Wednesday.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said a suggestion that the United States would accept Soviet occupation of parts of West Germany or other NATO lands was "flatly wrong."

He said the administration was confident any lands lost through an attack could be regained by force.

Syndicated columnist Rowland Evans and Robert Novak reported Wednesday that Carter's national security advisers had drawn up a new defense strategy conceding one-third of West Germany to communist invaders. They said the advisers concluded the administration could not win increased defense spending to shore up military power in Europe.

Powell denied the report. "Our policy remains unchanged in its totality," he said, adding that nuclear weapons remained a key part of defense strategy.

"What is appropriate to use, when and where," would depend on the specific situation, he said.

"The idea that our policy would accept a Soviet occupation of NATO territories is flatly wrong."

"We are committed to having the capability, along with our allies, to halt any Warsaw pact attack as quickly as possible and to restore pre-war boundaries, thus maintaining NATO territories," he said.

Powell said the Evans-Novak column was based on information from "a wide-ranging discussion of responses available to us in the event of an attack, which included political options but certainly was not limited to them."

"This review reaffirms existing strategy," Powell said.

He said response to any attack would rest on a policy that involved conventional, tactical nuclear and strategic nuclear weapons.

Declining to go into specifics on dealing with an invasion, Powell said, "Our response to such a situation would be other than words."

And he said, "It is our policy to regain any territory that might be lost in an invasion."

Defense Secretary Harold Brown, testifying before a Senate armed services subcommittee, also denied the Evans-Novak report.

"I do not advocate, and would not support, a policy which called for the United States to accept a loss or defeat in Europe," Brown said. "I believe deception would be a poor policy and unacceptable as a way of running a government."

Vendors slay market thieves

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Angry mobs beat or stoned to death nine suspected thieves last weekend, police reported. The spokesman said stallholders in a vegetable market, "angered by the constant theft of their produce by local gangs, rounded up the suspected thieves and killed them."

Bridge felt nothing

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — The first indication that the CN ferry William Carson was in trouble as she steamed through ice off southern Labrador June 2 was a telephone call to the bridge from the engine room, two members of the crew told a judicial inquiry Wednesday.

Quartermaster Harris Roland Kinden was at the wheel and Martin Walsh was on lookout when the third mate answered the engine room phone in the bridge shortly before 9 p.m.

Kinden said the third mate, John Rudolph, told Capt. Norman Hinks, who also was on the bridge at the time, that there was a hole in the ship.

The Carson sank at 1:45 a.m. June 3 about 16 miles off the southern Labrador coast. All 90 crew members and 38 passengers were rescued without injury by the coast guard icebreaker Sir Humphrey Gilbert and search and rescue helicopters.

The 8,300-ton vessel was making her first trip of the season from St. John's to Goose Bay in southern Labrador.

Kinden said the captain left the bridge upon receiving the third mate's report and came back a few minutes later and said, "We're sinking."

The quartermaster said the captain then obtained the ship's position from the third mate and sent a distress call over marine radio.

Kinden said everybody was in the lifeboats within an hour and passengers and crew later watched the vessel sink.

Questioned by F. J. Aylward, a St. John's lawyer representing Hinks, Kinden said he felt nothing unusual as the vessel moved through the ice. He said steering was more difficult because of the slower speed and ice. Walsh also said he felt no unusual vibrations.

Billy outearns brother

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Billy Carter's public appearances and endorsements will earn him a cool half million dollars this year — more than twice his big brother's salary as president.

Money magazine, in its August issue, said Carter's estimated $500,000 income would be earned at $5,000 per public appearance, certified cheque in advance.

The take is over and above the Carter family's peanut business which grosses $5 million a year and Billy's gasoline station which he said was running up $5,000 a week in tourist beer sales this spring.

In contrast, President Carter earns $200,000 in the White House plus an expense allowance of up to $150,000.

Billy Carter said he never solicits public appearances and he only accepts one out of every two invitations.

"I'd disappoint a lot of people if I didn't come," Carter told Money. "If people are crazy enough to pay money to hear me speak, I'm crazy enough to do it."

"For all his self-promoted good-boy persona," the magazine reports, "Billy is a shrewd businessman who doubled the earnings of the family peanut business in just three weeks."

Carter, now 40, dropped out of Emory College after two years, because, he said, he was already making money in business and had a wife and three children to support.

The Carters now have six children and recently moved into a new 15-room house 19 miles north of Plains, a transfer planned before Billy became a national figure. His major recent extravagance is a baby blue 1977 Cadillac for wife Sybil.

In an interview with Money, Bill also made these points:

● Most of his money goes into land. "I don't like to buy anything I can't hold in my hands and look at every day."

● The president never asks him specific questions. "I get very little guidance from him."

● He has little use for federal agencies, particularly the Internal Revenue Service which is doing a complete audit on all of the Carters' 1975 books. "I don't guess there are a bigger bunch of sons-of-bitches in the United States than the IRS."

Payment for Wallace: He'll let court decide

Crowding the act at public trough?

George Mussallem (SC - Dewdney) added yet another twist Wednesday to the convoluted debate on the Constitution Act.

Mussallem noted that few, if any, members of the Legislature failed to take advantage of the subsidized meals provided members in the official legislative dining room.

And he suggested that by participating in that subsidized program they were, in effect, receiving extra money from the government or at least part of their meal costs was being borne by the taxpayer.

Under the old terms of the Constitution Act it appears to be illegal for any MLA to receive extra benefits of any kind unless they are for work done for specific government or Legislature appointed committees, commissions or boards.

By JIM HUME
Colonist Reporter

Conservative leader Scott Wallace Wednesday became the fourth British Columbia MLA to stand in possible violation of the Constitution Act. He will seek a B.C. Supreme Court ruling to clear his name.

In a dramatic statement to the house Wednesday afternoon Wallace said he had innocently received payment of $192.85 for expenses incurred during attendance at the B.C. Conference on the Family in 1976.

Wallace said once the matter was brought to his attention he sought legal advice and was told that he appeared to be in violation of the act but that the act was so archaic that a clear ruling was difficult to obtain.

"Having sought a legal opinion, I am advised that whether or not the Constitution Act has been breached or not is not clear," Wallace said.

"What is perfectly clear is the fact that on October 24, 1976, a cheque for $51.95, and on Dec. 8, 1976, a cheque for $38.85 were paid by the ministry of human resources to cover some of my travel expenses. On Nov. 4, 1976, the Richmond Inn was paid $32.15 to cover the cost of three nights' accommodation while I attended the conference."

Recreation Minister Sam Bewif, Agriculture Minister James Hewitt, and Social Credit backbencher George Kerster (Coquitlam) are awaiting rulings on whether or not they breached the Constitution Act in 1976. All three received payment of expenses incurred while doing work on Housing Minister Hugh Curtis's committee on housing.

The Constitution Act permits cabinet ministers to receive expenses. It also permits commission members, board members and members of cabinet of legislative committee to receive expense payments. The act makes no mention of expense payments to MLAs who perform tasks for a cabinet minister not authorized by cabinet order or the authority of the full Legislature.

Opposition members instituted the original motions of breach of privilege against the three Social Credit members. Wallace said he wanted to bring his problem to the house himself.

Any offence I may have committed was certainly done without intent and it may well be proven that I did not breach the Constitution Act," Wallace said. He added that whatever the circumstances or the interpretation placed on the events concerning him, "I believe the proper thing to

Forced addict treatment 'never works'

Compulsory treatment for B.C. heroin addicts will be in place by the end of 1978, Health Minister Robert McClelland said Wednesday.

Former health minister Dennis Cocke immediately labelled the statement "a political announcement" and said he was prepared to "bet compulsory treatment never comes into being." Even if it did, Cocke said, it would prove ineffective. "Compulsory incarceration of heroin addicts, then their release back into the community, has never worked," he said.

Despite the quick critical response McClelland said the compulsory treatment plan had the full backing of cabinet.

"It will require new health legislation and will emphasize treatment of the addict as a sick person needing help rather than as a criminal," he said.

Target date for implementation is Dec. 31, 1978.

Victoria, Nanaimo and three mainland cities will have community care systems with a main 150-bed facility in the Vancouver area.

"The 'hard case' addict would be committed for treatment to an in-patient unit," McClelland said. "As an alternative an addict could be referred to an in-patient unit as a voluntary patient or, where the personal history justified it, an addict could be referred to an out-patient community clinic."

"Preliminary plans call for a minimum of three years' treatment for every addict committed to the program."

The minister said he would probably introduce the required legislation in the spring session, 1978.

"We need a new, fresh attack on the heroin problem in B.C. to augment the attempt by police agencies to stem the flow of narcotics into the community," he said.

The NDP proposed earlier this year that a heroin maintenance program be established to help combat the problem.

Conservative party leader Scott Wallace said that he agreed in principle with the government proposal, but that he has reservations about its operation.

Wallace, a medical doctor, said application of the program could be dangerous because "this government hasn't been outstanding in understanding problems of young people."

He said strong safeguards were needed to ensure that the program wouldn't be abused and that decisions made to hold someone for treatment are regularly reviewed.

McClelland said the compulsory aspect of the new legislation would not be precedent setting. "Under the Mental Health Act and the Venereal Disease Suppression Act, for example, authority is vested in specific health officials to direct persons into treatment where warranted for their own or others well being. There are appropriate penalties for non-compliance."

The minister said the new legislation would include appeal procedures for individuals disagreeing with the compulsory aspects of the bill.

Wolfe, service union trade strike threats

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

The B.C. Government Employees' Union wage dispute began to take on a rough and tumble appearance Wednesday as Finance Minister Evan Wolfe jumped into the picture with threats that were quickly matched by the union.

Wolfe warned that any selective strike action by the 37,000-member union could be met with a government lockout of all but essential workers.

John Fryer, BCGEU general secretary, accused Wolfe of intimidation and raised the possibility of charging the minister under the B.C. Labor Code.

Wolfe was strongly critical of Fryer and before the day was out was caught in a crossfire of criticism from Fryer and former NDP labor minister William King.

Fryer said he was naive. King said his action was "extremely foolish."

Wolfe's ire was raised by the union's decision to idle one or more "target groups" of employees - likely liquor store workers - if the membership favors strike action in a vote expected to be completed by mid-September.

The two contentious points:

• The industry wants past service credits to go only to existing IWA members, something the union calls a "dou-

Board guidelines to be insulting.

The offer is for a 4 1/2-percent wage increase in the first year and three per cent in the second. The AIB allows six per cent in the first year and four per cent in the second.

Also unacceptable, says Fryer, is the government's stand against continuation of a cost-of-living allowance and objection to having grievances go to arbitration.

Actually, the union's threat to take out one group such as the liquor store workers was first reported in the Colonist almost two months ago, but there was no threat of government reprisal at that time.

Wolfe doesn't see anything

Blast entombs 150 miners, riot kills nine

JOHANNESBURG (AP) - An explosion ripped through a coal mine in northern Mozambique, trapping 150 black miners and leading to above-ground rioting that killed nine foreigners, Mozambique radio said Wednesday.

The government was reported to have accepted a South African offer of rescue teams to search for the entombed miners.

The blast and rioting took place at the explosion mine at Moatize, a village 20 miles north of the seacoast capital of Maputo, Mozambique radio said.

Rescue operations were in progress, the radio said, and troops were sent to restore order at the Chipanga No. 3 mine, in remote Tete Province close to Rhodesia.

The radio said there was little hope of survival for the miners trapped in the explosion during the Tuesday afternoon shift. It came 11 months after a blast killed 95 miners in another shaft at Moatize.

The broadcast did not identify the foreigners who were killed in what it called "grave disturbances" after Tuesday's blast. The Johannesburg Star said some might have been Belgians and that the mine manager was Portuguese.

The South African Chamber of Mines said it offered to fly in four five-man rescue teams today and that the Mozambique government accepted.

Black-ruled Mozambique and white-ruled South Africa have no diplomatic relations and despite economic links, the Marxist-oriented government of President Samora Machel strongly opposes South Africa's policy of segregation.

Last September, 20 South Africans assisted in rescue operations after the methane gas explosion that killed the 95 miners.

The cause of Tuesday's blast was not reported, but miners familiar with the area said it could have been an explosion of methane or coal dust.

Interior may be first to feel IWA shutdown

There were indications Wednesday night that the International Woodworkers of America - B.C.'s biggest union - is ready to launch strike action in the southern interior, possibly as early as next week.

If it occurs, it will be because of failure to win industry agreement on the form an overall pension plan is to take.

High-ranking IWA sources said that the southern Interior is the most likely strike target, but that if a walkout there didn't achieve the necessary results it could spread quickly to the coastal region, which includes Vancouver Island.

A formal announcement of the union's plans is expected to be made at a Vancouver news conference today.

This is bargaining year for the 42,000 IWA members in B.C. and the union, served strike notice some time ago on the coastal and southern Interior regions, but took no action. Last month it hailed as an important breakthrough, agreement by the province's three regions

- coastal, southern and northern Interior - to accept one over-all pension plan. This would mean a portable pension at last for IWA members working anywhere in western Canada.

However, as late as last week, the union said it ran into pension proposals from the industry that it found unacceptable.

The two contentious points:

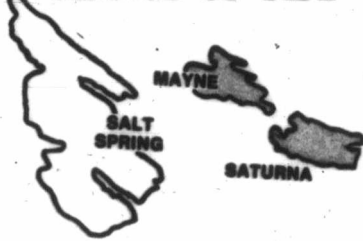

• The industry wants past service credits to go only to existing IWA members, something the union calls a "dou-

Salt Spring: Widening gulf between old and new

A LOOK at the future of the beautiful Gulf Islands - and their distinctive life styles - is taken in this four-part series by Colonist reporter Nancy Brown. Under the pressure of increasing permanent populations, summer residents, and hordes of tourists, the islands are bending but proving resilient in fighting for their former status. People, progress and over-government are what concern long-time residents.

THREE ISLANDS at a CHANGE OF TIDE

Second of four parts

"As long as the ferries are few and far between, and they are crowded and expensive, Salt Spring Island will survive."

"But if they run more frequently then it will become just part of the Saanich Peninsula, and if they build that bridge from Vancouver that they talk about, then we will be just a bedroom suburb of Vancouver."

ing after nine years on the island.

He's an architect who had a hand in the Salt Spring Island community plan, and who worries quite a bit these days about the future of what used to be a quiet little island.

HIS CONCERNS are reflected in conversations with many of the island's oldtimers who wonder how to keep the island rural without denying access to others who seek peace and quiet.

Many residents agree with Schubart's assessment that the key to the future lies with the provincial government and its handling of the ferries.

"A road is a line between two points and a ferry route is a dotted line, but the more frequent the service the closer the dots get, and soon you have the equivalent of a road," Schubart said.

Once travel becomes convenient and comfortable, the scenic quality of the island will attract more people.

"When that happens property prices will increase, the rural areas will change to suburban, life will get more and more regulated, and this will become a rich man's enclave," Schubart says.

Population growth on the island has been slow but steady.

Twenty years ago the island counted a population of 2,800, and it now has 4,500 residents.

BUT BUILDING is going on at a rapid pace.

In the first six months of this year the Capital Region issued 261 building permits to an approximate value of $2,154,682. The figure almost equals last year's total of 268 permits.

And there is a shift in the population, which at one time consisted in the main of retired people.

There is a younger population, both of youngsters who grew up on the island and who want to remain and newcomers who feel they can have a calmer way of life. The influx of these young people has meant that the school population has increased from 169 to 1,100 in the last 20 years, the fastest increase occurring over the last five to 10 years.

These young people have

Cyprus tense in mourning

NICOSIA (AP) — Greek Cypriots began 40 days of mourning Wednesday for Cyprus President Archbishop Makarios whose death created a power vacuum on this tense, divided island. Turkish Cypriots immediately stepped up their demands for autonomy.

"We lost Makarios at a time when we needed him more than ever," Greek Cypriot Bishop Gregorius said of the American-educated archbishop who died Wednesday — 10 days before his 64th birthday — of a heart attack he suffered Tuesday night.

Bishop Gregorius' seat is at Kyrenia, in the northern third of the island held by Turkish Cypriots and 25,000 mainland Turkish troops who invaded Cyprus in July, 1974, following a rightist coup by Greek Cypriots and Greeks that ousted Makarios briefly. He returned as president, but with little power over the Turkish Cypriots.

Since 1974, negotiations involving Greece, Turkey and the superpowers have continued intermittently over the Turkish Cypriot demand for a federated state with a weak central government and a strong autonomous Turkish and Greek Cypriot zones.

Birthdays 'over' for Ma Murray

LILLOOET, B.C. — A large crowd gathered in this B.C. interior village Wednesday to officially celebrate the 90th — and last — birthday of Ma Murray, the outspoken journalist with the tongue of nettle and heart of gold.

It's not that she doesn't expect to live until 91. Margaret Theresa Lally Murray has simply decided not to recognize any more years.

"Ninety's enough," she says in an interview with the same determination that made her famous across North America for her ability to tear strips off politicians and the pompous of all professions.

A congratulatory birthday message from Prime Minister Trudeau sits on her buffet table along with a sheaf of affectionate cards from others she and her late husband George, befriended in a long career of Liberalism and newspapering.

Ma hasn't lost her touch, although she has softened a bit. "Shucks," she says. "I've just been lucky. I've got nothing to crow about. I'm content now just to lean back and count my blessings."

NORTH VANCOUVER — A former Japanese blackbelt judo champion may be in the Guinness Book of Records for hitting 5,001 golf balls in 12 hours. The book's editors have tentatively confirmed that Tad Aoki will be listed in a new category.

NAIROBI, Kenya — President Idi Amin has set up a commission to investigate "the affairs of some saboteurs who cut off Uganda's telephone and telex communications" in an attempt to overthrow his government.

VANCOUVER — Police said Frances Elizabeth Isaac, 29, of Whitehorse, has been charged with second degree murder in the death of her foster daughter Joy Ann Ladue, 3. The girl was brought to hospital suffering from head and other injuries and died there July 20.

Montrealers drugged in CIA study

MONTREAL (CP) — A former official of a private foundation used by the CIA to channel research funds for brainwashing experiments has confirmed that a Montreal psychiatric institute took part in the experiments.

Col. James Monroe, former executive director of the now-defunct Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology, said CIA funds to the Allan Memorial Institute amounted to "$20,000 to $30,000 a year for a couple of years."

The institute, part of the Royal Victoria Hospital, is a teaching wing of McGill University's psychiatry department and did the research work as part of a 25-year, $25-million project by the CIA to learn how to manipulate the human mind.

The McGill research was conducted by the late Dr. Ewen Cameron, director of the institute from 1943, when it was founded, to 1964. He died in 1967.

Monroe said in a telephone interview from Kingsland, Tex., that Cameron had no knowledge of the CIA links. "There was no ethical cloud over anything Cameron was doing," he said, adding that the findings became public information in journals such as the Lancet of Britain and the Canadian Medical Journal.

A 1959 financial report of Monroe's society indicates it paid Dr. Cameron $18,405 in 1958 to conduct studies that included testing three highly potent drugs — Thorazine, LSD and Sernyl — on patients at the institute.

Thorazine is still marketed as a powerful tranquilizer but Sernyl has been withdrawn from the market for human consumption.

"The work they did had absolutely nothing to do with interrogation," said Monroe, a former air force expert on brainwashing.

"The fact that we were receiving funds from different sources was really no concern of Dr. Cameron's or any of the other grantees."

Several colleagues of Cameron and his widow doubted he knew the research results were passed on to the CIA.

"I knew he got grants from various organizations," said Mrs. Cameron from her home in Loudonville, N.Y., "but most of them came from the federal government. I never heard Dr. Cameron mention the CIA."

Dr. Maurice Dondier, director of the institute for the last six years, said he did not know of the CIA connection until he was told about it Tuesday.

Dr. Robert Cleghorn, institute director from 1964 to 1970, said the only person who might have known of the CIA link is dead but he refused to elaborate. He was not referring to Cameron.

Dondier and Cleghorn say research grants are studied more closely today than they were in the past.

Dondier said there "was not the same kind of consciousness 20 years ago as there is today. At that time there would be nobody checking on it."

But Dondier said research on sensory deprivation has been pertinent in determining how people react to living in submarines or space, and he thinks it would be accepted today.

"I don't see why that kind of research should be turned down as long as the work is published. Our official policy is not to accept a grant for research if the work is not published."

Scientology's roots 'fiction'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia Supreme Court hearing was told this week by a committee of the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons that the dianetic teachings of the Church of Scientology are rooted in science fiction.

The committee said the church's teachings display "an arrogance that cannot be accepted in any dedicated seeker of the truth" and "is clearly written by a small-minded person and is addressed to the small-minded."

The committee's assessment of Scientology was made at a hearing in which Dr. Pieter Taams of Maple Ridge is appealing the college council's decision to suspend him from practice.

Taams was disciplined by the college council after a committee of inquiry found that he, among other acts of unprofessional conduct, improperly used dianetics and Scientology in treating a patient for emotional problems.

The college ordered him to refrain from practicing medicine for three months and fined him $3,000 plus $2,000 towards the cost of the committee's inquiry.

Mr. Justice J. A. Macdonald was told that the college council committee concluded that Taams had:

- Told a woman that only his method of treatment could cure her;
- Used methods of treatment not recognized by medical science and not founded on responsible medical experience or research;
- Took emotional and financial advantage of the patient contrary to the code of ethics;
- Claimed payment for treatment not performed;
- And failed to maintain proper medical records.

Agency wants to say it's sorry

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA will attempt to locate and notify individuals who secretly were given drugs or were the subjects of other mind-controlling techniques in agency-sponsored experiments more than 12 years ago, its director testified Wednesday.

Stanfield Turner told a joint hearing of the Senate intelligence committee and the health subcommittee he had no idea how many individuals were involved in the testing, some without their knowledge.

More than 80 institutions, including 44 colleges or universities, and 185 non-government researchers were used in the tests, among them Montreal's McGill University.

Many were not aware that the CIA was supplying the funding through intermediary foundations, Turner said.

He said no names of individuals who may have received drugs unwittingly are in CIA records, but "we are working to determine if there are adequate clues to lead to their identification, and if so, how to go about fulfilling the

Turner told the senators he would not release the names of institutions and researchers who did the testing. But he said under questioning that perhaps some way could be found of notifying them privately and letting them decide whether their names should be public.

of the individuals without their consent.

The CIA director emphasized that the project, ultimately known as MK-ULTRA, as ended 12 years ago after continuing for nearly 2 decades.

Pronovost to coach Sabres

One National Hockey League club announced the signing of a new coach Wednesday to Intense wooing by Mayor Coleman A. Young and abandoned the suburbs in favor of a 30-year agreement making them the prime and controlling tenants in a downtown riverfront arena. Young got what he wanted: the National Hockey League franchise playing its games in the city's posh Ice Palace, already under construction next to Cobo Arena, rather than a site across the road from the Pontiac, Mich., Silverdome where the Detroit Lions play football.

The Red Wings got what they desired: control of the site of their games. As sweeteners Young gave management of the new arena, Cobo Arena and a 2,000-car parking structure to the team which manages Olympia Stadium, the NHL team's current home.

The 20,000-seat facility — plus 11,000-seat Cobo Arena — will be leased to the Olympia Stadium management team for 30 years, with options for another 30 years included.

In return, the city will get $450,000 annually in rent plus an additional $2 million in revenues from the attached parking structure plus a 50-cent surcharge on each ticket for each arena event.

The city projects, conservatively it says, $3.5 million in revenues each year for use in paying off the $2.2 million it will need to retire bonds for the arena and parking facility.

"Basically, it was a solid business decision," said Red Wings' owner Bruce A. Norris, a wealthy grain shipping executive.

McCormick surprised by Picken

OTTAWA (CP) — Eight winners in Wednesday's third round of men's singles competition will advance to quarterfinal play today in the Canadian national tennis championships held this year at the Rideau Lawn Tennis Club.

Top-seeded Harry Fritz of Toronto beat Glenn Michibata, also of Toronto, 6-1, 6-1 and seventh-seeded Bob Pudicombe of Vancouver defeated fellow Vancouverite Ian Pomeroy 6-7, 6-2, 6-2.

Third-seeded Richard Legendre of Quebec City defeated Calgary's Nick Mohtadi 7-6, 6-2. Vancouver's Bob Bettauer beat Peter Sutcliffe of Montreal 6-3, 6-3. Ottawa's Jim Boyce, defending champion, held off Vancouver's Tony Bardsley 2-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Vancouver's 10th seeded John Picken pulled a surprise win over fourth-seeded former Victorian Don McCormick of Vancouver 6-7, 7-5, 6-3. Toronto's Dave Brown defeated Mike Puc of London, Ont., 6-2, 6-2, and in a marathon three-hour set, Toronto's Dale Power beat Montreal's Francois Synaghe 6-4, 4-6, 7-5.

On the women's side, top-seeded Marjorie Blackwood of Ottawa beat Toronto's Sally Coles 6-2, 7-5 in the second round of singles play.

Montreal's Andree Martin beat Oakville's Judy Pridham 6-1, 6-0. Another Montrealer, Nicole Marois, defeated Vancouver's Gabrielle Slezakova 6-2, 4-6, 7-5.

Richest bonspiel planned

EDMONTON (CP) — The richest bonspiel in curling history, the $50,000 World Open Tournament of Champions, will be staged here Oct. 20-25.

A news conference was held Wednesday that several European teams, including world champion Ragnar Kamp of Sweden, are expected to attend. Other prospects are former world champion Otto Danieli of Switzerland and Bill Muirhead of Scotland, runner-up in 1976 to Bruce Roberts of the United States.

Roberts and another American star, Bud Somerville, are high on the list of possibilities.

A modified triple-knockout competition is scheduled in the event, to be run off at the Shamrock Curling Club.

Beban Park, recreation commission hit again

By DONNA REIMER
Colonist Correspondent

NANAIMO Allegations of unfair labor practices and misuse of federal and provincial employment program funds are the latest charges to rise to the surface in the long-simmering controversy surrounding Nanaimo Regional District's Beban Park and the city of Nanaimo's Parks and Recreation Commission.

The latest allegations deserve an immediate and thorough investigation, said Nanaimo Ald. Nelson Allen, in a letter to Paul Smith, chairman of the Nanaimo Regional Board.

The controversy has been a long and complicated one, basically centring around the region's management of Beban Park, and the city's involvement, through an upcoming management contract for Beban Park and through the city's director of parks and recreation, Harry Wipperfurth.

THE CONTROVERSY has spread to include the criticism of labor practices and even to lead city council to give a long, hard look at the role of the parks and recreation commission.

Council is scheduled to discuss the commission's role at an in-committee meeting this week.

Latest flare-up in the controversy started several weeks ago, when a letter of resignation from J. Arthur

... probe started

Bray, supervisor of Beban Park's social centre, was printed in a local twice-weekly paper, The Nanaimo Times.

In the letter, Bray made allegations about unfair labor practices at Beban Park.

HE ALSO alleged that staff morale was poor and that staff was subject to intimidation.

Bray's letter set off a chain of reaction, including a letter from a former Beban Park employee alleging the misuse of Youth Employment Program funds, a letter of resignation from J. Arthur

Allen maintained in his letter to Smith that Beban Park and the director of parks and recreation are a de-facto part of the city's operations.

He said that he was making a formal request of the regional district for an investigation because of the failure of the mayor of Nanaimo, Frank Ney, to recognize the involvement the city has in Beban Park.

A letter from Marja Jorgensen, who was co-ordinator of the summer arts and crafts program at Beban Park, says that she lost her position when Youth Employment Program funds became available to the Beban Park program.

"I AM SURE that it was never the policy of the Youth Employment Program to take the jobs away from others who were already employed," she wrote.

Allen first raised his concerns about the allegations in the Bray and Jorgensen letters at a city council meeting last week.

The charges, Allen said, are serious ones, and the city could be in trouble for disregarding the B.C. Labor Relations Act.

But, other council members and City Administrator Ted Chace insisted, the city is not yet involved in the running of Beban Park.

Beban Park is a regional facility, and will soon be run by the city under a management contract.

Allen maintained in his letter to Smith that Beban Park and the director of parks and recreation are a de-facto part of the city's operations.

He said that he was making a formal request of the regional district for an investigation because of the failure of the mayor of Nanaimo, Frank Ney, to recognize the involvement the city has in Beban Park.

Allegations of this nature are very serious," Allen wrote. "The matter must be cleared up as soon as possible and results of the investigation must be made public."

He said he would ask for a provincial or federal investigation if the region did not make one.

ALD. ALLEN also made public a letter of resignation from Carl Lacey, assistant to the director, written May 16.

In his letter, Lacey alleges that he had been told verbally to disregard specific provincial labor regulations. He also outlined his discontent with several other aspects of his job.

"I find the department morale to be very low, having talked with other fellow staff members," Lacey wrote.

A PRELIMINARY report by City Administrator Chace gave his assessment of the city's involvement in the Bray controversy, and the alleged unfair labor practices.

Bray was an employee of the regional district, Chace said, but because Beban Park has been a co-operative venture, and because some of the allegations reflect on the city's director of parks and recreation, Chace talked to Bray about the letter.

The city administrator suggested that "a professional administrator would have left some constructive suggestions with his fellow administrators, upon leaving, or better, would have done so while still a part of the organization."

Mr. Bray did not communicate his concerns to Mr. Hott (the region's administrator) or myself."

THE UNFAIR labor practices referred to in Bray's letter, the practice of laying off a probationary employee after three months, only to rehire the employee again on probation, and thus avoid union membership, is a practice brought on by the award of the Lindholm commission, Chace said.

Before the 1976 award of the Lindholm commission, Chace said, the period of probation for union employees was 12 months. The commission reduces this to three months.

"As a result employees, after three months, are required to apply for union membership and must participate in contributory benefits such as superannuation and medical services."

THE PROBLEM has been discussed with the union and it has been agreed that the labor-management committee will discuss the matter further, Chace said.

There are no outstanding grievances regarding the procedure, he added.

Local Employees Union of Public Employees officers have not been available to comment on the allegations.

Chace said that it should not be concluded that there are no problems with Beban Park. But until the city finally signs the management contract, he said, it cannot be come involved in the details of solving the Beban Park problems.

... wants answers

THE CONTRACT has received council's initial approval, and is scheduled to be adopted soon.

Mayor Ney has also written a letter to Smith and the regional district, in answer to Allen's letter.

In his letter, Ney said that he is concerned about Allen's statements.

Ney pointed out that the city has not yet taken over the management of Beban Park.

THE MATTER, Ney said, was brought before council last week, and contrary to Allen's inference was fully discussed.

"The council has not taken this matter lightly," he wrote. "The senior staff are carrying out an investigation at this very minute which will be brought back to council when the study is complete."

The regional board has not met since Allen's letter was written. Next meeting is slated for Tuesday night.

IN A RELATED matter, the controversy has led the city council to take another look at its parks and recreation commission.

The role of the commission, in relation to the role of the city council, in parks and recreation matters, has often been unclear.

Chace told council recently that before the Beban Park contract becomes operational, the city must clear up the role of the parks and recreation commission.

SHOULD THE parks and recreation commission take over full responsibility for the Beban contract? Chace asked. Or does council want to reduce the commission to a merely advisory role?

Wednesday the commission made a plea for council to delay the decision until the commission could complete its master plan.

The plan, to be done for the commission by consultants, would examine the commission's philosophy, aims and objectives, as well as revenue, bylaws, budget procedures, administrative structure, land acquisition, community involvement and delivery of service.

FRANK CRANE, chairman of the commission's subcommittee on the recreation master plan, said that the plan would "help to pour oil on some very troubled water."

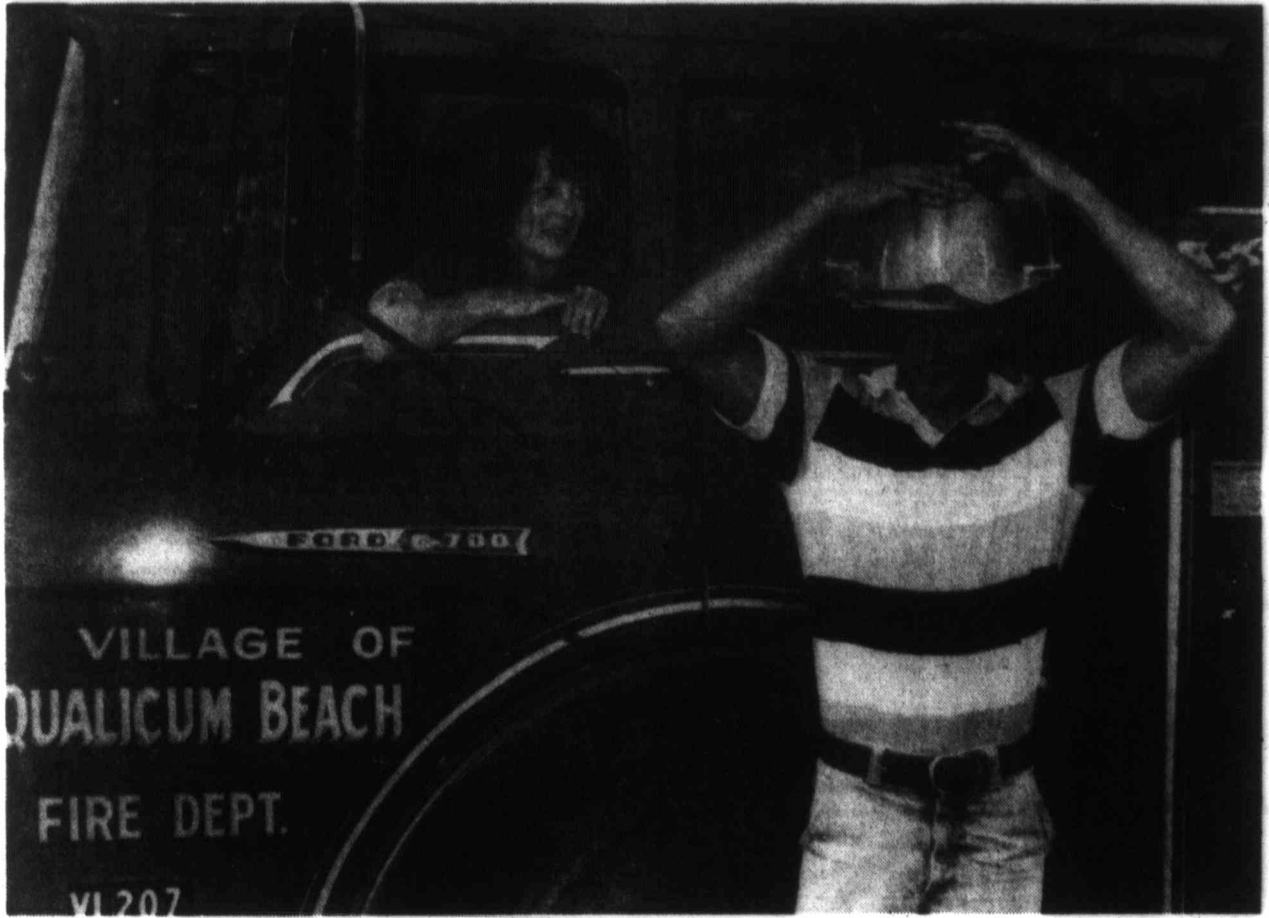

"There is no doubt that a master plan would help the council, the commission and the regional district sort out the present tangle and controversy surrounding recreation facilities in the community."

Deadline for proposals from consultants for the master plan is Friday, and indications are there will be at least four bids, Crane said.

ALLEN, HIMSELF, a member of the parks and recreation commission, said that it would be very easy to expand the terms of reference of the master plan to include a study of the relationship between the commission, council and the region.

Any attempt to reduce powers of the recreation commission now, Allen said, would be interpreted by the public as an attempt to wash the whole controversy.

Council members and regional district directors are sensitive to the charges a whitewash. With a referendum expected this fall to raise the mill rate at Beban Park, elected representatives are trying to wash the line between white wash and stirring up the whole controversy.

He makes the waves but where they count

By JOHN LANGTON
Colonist Correspondent

QUALICUM BEACH — VET ABL: These are Don Brown's call letters which he uses whenever he trips around the world on the airwaves. He is one of the great multitude of amateur radio operators.

Ham radio operators can use up to 2,000 watts of power when transmitting, so unlike citizen band (CB) users, with their maximum of five watts, hams can talk to people anywhere in the world. Some bounce radio signals off a satellite or even the moon.

ONE EVENING recently, Don called up a friend in a neighboring community to get some information, briefly listened in on a conversation between an operator in Quebec and another in California, then contacted a ham in New Zealand, who was extolling the virtues of that country.

Amateur radio operators have a strict code of ethics. They try hard not to jam one another's transmissions. They are always ready to render assistance and they have a plan of action worked out for emergencies. The operators work on a first-name basis.

EVERY EVENING, operators meet on the airwaves from 6:30 to 7:30 to pass on messages. This is such an important part of their work that most of them have emergency power supplies.

If there should ever be a disaster, some ham operators somewhere will be able to communicate to pass on vital information. The operators are sometimes called on to help with search-and-rescue operations.

Don is very enthusiastic and has had an operator's licence since 1965. It is illegal to even own an operating transmitter without being licensed. Courses are set up for prospective operators. The next one in Nanaimo will be from Sept. 12 to mid-December. Students will meet two evenings a week. The course will cost $21 and is being organized by Malaspina College.

Graduating students will have a licence to transmit in Morse Code, but not voice. Another course and an endorsement on their licences is required for that.

THE BASIC course includes the theory of radio working and transmission. Students learn rules and regulations and operating procedures. They must be able to transmit and receive at least 10 words per minute in Morse Code. Don said they can set up a basic radio shack with transmitter and receiver for about $500 and they could make most of the equipment themselves.

Don has accumulated about 30 pieces of equipment, which is neatly arranged in a very impressive array in a small room of his mobile home at the Qualicum airport. Everything is connected to a huge rotating antenna on a mast outside.

Some amateur radio operators are starting to use Telex machines to relay messages on the airwaves. Others are experimenting with TV. Don recently acquired Telex equipment which he is re-vamping to fit in with his receivers and transmitters.

HE SAID other amateur operators will be able to connect to his Telex. The messages will be typed and also punched on paper tape. By playing the tapes back through a machine, he will be able to relay messages.

Don said most amateurs make a lot of their equipment. He has studied many books, taken several courses and constructed most of his equipment, some from kits and the rest from parts he has acquired from many sources.

Don said people in all walks of life are interested in ham radio. He has talked with everyone from janitors to presidents. Barry Goldwater is a ham, but Don has so far only been able to contact his secretaries.

MISSIONARIES find radio useful. Disabled people, including the blind, often enjoy ham radio because it opens their horizons, even though they may be confined to their homes. Search and rescue in one part of Vancouver Island depends heavily on a wheel-chair-bound operator who monitors radio frequencies, listening for distress calls.

Don has a private pilot's licence. He said: "If you can't find me in the air, I'll be on the air. VE7 ABL."

Film stars in new element

Qualicum Beach volunteer firemen would like to have film stars Anita Gillette and Barry Van Dyke, son of Dick Van Dyke, as members of the brigade. The two stars are in the cast of Ants!, a movie which was filmed recently at Qualicum College Inn. The volunteer fire department provided a truck for movie and some of members were extras.

Second printing for Reflections

Pictorial work turns into best seller

Printing of an additional 5,000 copies of the beautiful pictorial book, Vancouver Island Reflections, has been commissioned by the Vancouver Island Real Estate Board.

Published by the Vancouver Island Real Estate Board, the book is a sensitive collection of over 100 full-color photographs depicting the unique charm, character and beauty of the island.

Vancouver Island Reflections is the direct result of a fascinating, and overwhelmingly successful photographic contest sponsored by the Vancouver Island Real Estate Board.

The contest, which ran for 12 months, attracted over 2,000 entries, the majority of which were from local residents and amateurs.

"We have now sold nearly 5,000 copies of our first edition," said Allan F. Parker of Nanaimo, president of the board. "So with the height of the tourist season upon us, and thought of anticipated Christmas rush in mind, we have decided to go to our second printing of another 5,000 books."

"Since the first edition appeared just before Christmas last year, the response and compliments we have received about this beautiful book has really been extremely gratifying," he added.

"Because it is such a unique portrait of the island as seen by the people who live here themselves, it really seems to have captured everyone's imagination. It has proved to be a wonderful gift, not only amongst local residents, but has also been purchased for friends and relatives overseas, as well as by tourists as a memento of their visit to the island."

Parker added that compliments about the book continue to be received by the board from across Canada and around the world.

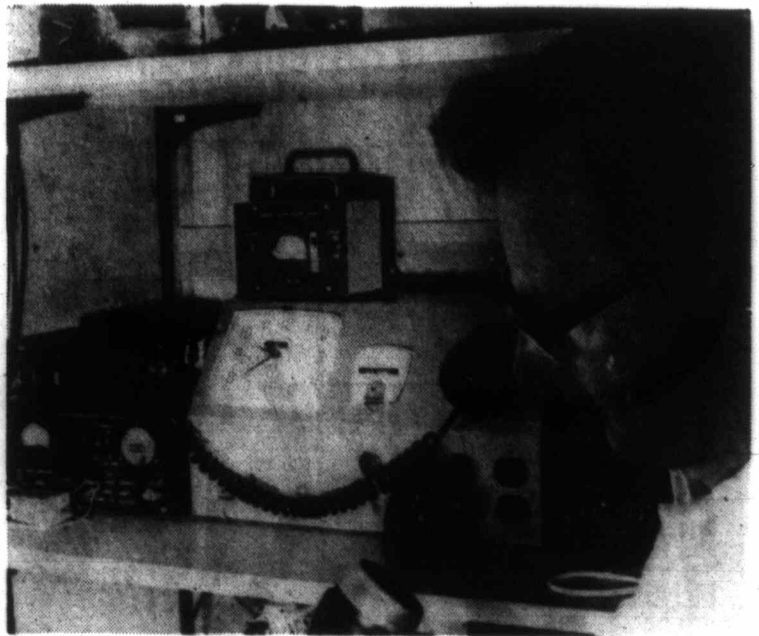

"We have even found that copies of Reflections have been taken back to places as far away as Brazil, and Europe, which we find immensely gratifying," he said.

Vancouver Island Reflections cost $17.95. It is available through local bookstores, member agencies of the Vancouver Island Real Estate Board, and the board office at 6374 Metral Drive, Nanaimo.

Gabriola resort robbed by thieves

NANAIMO — A break-in at Gabriola Island's Silva Bay Resort has netted thieves approximately $15,500.

RCMP here report that the break-in was discovered Tuesday morning. Thieves broke into the resort's office and made off with a small safe containing receipts from the busy holiday weekend.

Murder try among charges

Three juveniles charged with serious offences over the holiday weekend appeared in the family court division of Victoria provincial court Tuesday afternoon and were remanded in custody until Friday.

The names of the three, all 16 years of age, cannot be published by law. The most serious charge was that of attempted murder against a youth who will be 17 Sunday.

He was arrested and charged after an unidentified jogger came across a blood-drenched 16-year-old girl lying on a rock off Sayward Road late Sunday afternoon. The girl suffered multiple stab wounds during an attack in Saanich and was taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital where her condition was listed as fair Tuesday.

The boy was remanded in custody by Judge D. K. McAdam after crown counsel John Morton made the application so that arrangements could be made for psychiatric assessment.

Morton also asked for three days to find out more about a Calgary youth charged with attempted armed robbery.

The youth was arrested after a 24-year-old taxi driver, injured in a scuffle with the gun-toting youth, drove to the Victoria city police station, where officers chased the suspect into the Chinese school across the street apprehending him.

Joseph Ng, a fourth-year physics student at the University of Victoria, told police he picked up the youth at a service station at Fort and Yates at 4:15 a.m. Sunday and was driving him to an address in the 1700-block Shelbourne when the attempted robbery took place.

Ng said he had only gone a short distance before he was ordered to turn down a street and to slow down. The youth then held a gun against the back of Ng's head and demanded money, threatening to blow off the cab driver's head if he didn't hand it over. After giving the robber $5 and explaining that he had just handed in his cash, Ng was reaching into his pocket for his change when he caught the youth, who was in the back seat of the taxi, off guard and wrenched the gun away. Ng had his glasses broken and suffered a face cut during the scuffle.

Ng then radioed for help and drove to the police station, tending off attempts to grab the car keys and move the gearshift arm. The driver also said he was offered $20 to let his passenger out.

After screaming to a halt in front of the station, Ng leaned on his automobile horn and eight officers ran out and gave chase.

The third 16-year-old was charged with breaking and entering and pointing a loaded .357 magnum revolver at police after a Tuesday morning incident at Robinson's Sporting Goods, 1307 Broad Street.

Victoria city police and members of the Greater Victoria emergency response team surrounded the area and took up arms after being called by an alert dispatcher at Island Taxi who heard glass breaking at the sporting goods store a block away.

Constables Frank Whitton, Gerry Tuttle and Peter Hardy entered the premises and were confronted by the youth, who held a gun and moved to the back of the store.

Whitton took up a position close to a loft where the boy was hiding and talked for nearly two hours before persuading him to surrender.

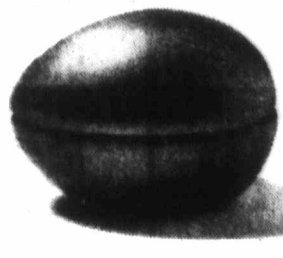

Insp. Doug Grant, in charge of police operations during the incident, said the boy threatened suicide at one point but was talked out of it by Whitton.

Colleges face major changes under new act

Sweeping administrative changes were the main feature of a long-awaited Colleges Act, introduced in the Legislature Monday by Education Minister Pat McGeer.

The Colleges and Provincial Institutes Act, Bill 82, sets up three separate councils to govern occupational training, academic instruction, and management of the 14 community colleges in the province, and the B.C. Institute of Technology.

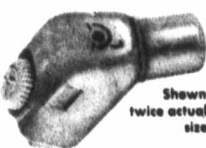

The existing college councils will be replaced by college boards, which will provide local management for the colleges.

The boards will establish program advisory committees which will give college professional staff and students a voice at the board level.

The education ministry will provide all funds, except those obtained from course fees, for the colleges. Currently a small proportion of college operating budgets (in Victoria it constitutes less than two mills in taxation) comes from local property taxes.

At the same time that it provides all the funds for colleges, the ministry intends to keep its fingers tightly on the purse strings, mainly by reserving many seats on college boards and the three councils for its own appointees.

The province will appoint almost half the members of most college boards, with all nine members of the occupational training council and all five members of the academic council being government appointees.

Tories support go-ahead

Grits weigh pipe fate

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal cabinet expects to make its decision on a northern natural gas pipeline by Monday, informed sources here said Wednesday.

The sources said the cabinet is scheduled to meet Friday night and again Saturday and Sunday to reach a consensus on whether a pipeline should be built, and if so, which route should be followed.

Meanwhile, Opposition Leader Joe Clark said Wednesday his Progressive Conservative Party agrees with the need for a pipeline and will support an Alaska-Yukon route to move Alaska gas to the lower 48 states of the United States.

The party reached agreement on its stand at a caucus meeting on the eve of the special two-day Commons pipeline debate, set to begin today.

After the debate ends late Friday afternoon, the Trudeau cabinet will begin its deliberations. A decision had been expected within a week to 10 days of the start of deliberations, but the sources said cabinet will meet throughout the weekend and expects to have made up its mind by Monday.

Clark called on the government to start immediate studies on possible routes to move the Canadian gas, including a pipeline along the nearly-completed Dempster Highway into the Northwest Territories.

The National Energy Board, in its recommendations to cabinet, said any approval of the Foothills' proposal should require the company to file an application by 1979 for a Dempster route.

But studies on the social, economic and environmental impact of a pipeline on the North say not enough information is available to make any recommendation on such a route.

The Conservative leader also agreed that a substantial payment should be made to the Yukon by either the United States government or the company involved to help make up for the impact such a project will have on the area.

Communities in the Yukon should have the right to tap into the pipeline to obtain any natural gas supplies they need, he said.

Clark said the party felt these "stringent conditions" should be imposed since the pipeline is not being built for Canadian benefit and the country is making its territory available to help the U.S. meet its needs.

U.S. government officials already have protested the proposals in Canada for a $200 million payment to offset the impact of a pipeline on the Yukon and the suggestions of route changes to pave the way for a future Canadian connection. Both measures would add to the cost of natural gas to U.S. consumers.

Clark saw little value in selecting any specific date to start construction.

The Lysyk inquiry on the social and economic impact of a pipeline on the Yukon said Tuesday that start of construction should be delayed to 1981 from Foothills' current proposal to start building a pipeline in 1979.

The proposal for the Foothills project also has support from the New Democratic Party, which earlier this year said it seemed the best available route.

The Liberal proposals would permit all children with English as their mother tongue to attend English schools.

In addition, other children who have mastered English would be able to attend English schools, Mrs. Lavoie-Roux said.

Under the proposed legislation, only children with at least one parent educated in English primary schools in Quebec would be able to attend English schools.

The Liberals also propose that both English and French be recognized as languages of use in Quebec. English has no official status under Bill 101.

PROVINCIAL COURT

A 22-year-old man facing a charge of attempted robbery with threats of violence was remanded in custody Wednesday in Victoria provincial court by Judge Blake Allan.

Michael David Filipchuk, who lives at the Salvation Army hostel at 521 Johnson, was charged in connection with an abortive, noon-hour holdup at the Toronto-Dominion Bank, 630 Yates, on Tuesday.

Insp. Angus Stewart, head of the Victoria city police detective division, said the attempt occurred at about 12:35 p.m. and was foiled when a woman teller left the would-be robber standing there as she walked over to another teller to inform her of what was happening. The second teller then walked into the manager's office to notify him of the holdup and a phone call was then placed to Victoria city police.

By the time police arrived on the scene, the man had departed but the suspect was arrested less than five hours later after police photos were shown to the first teller.

Filipchuk was remanded without plea until Friday for election of his trial method and a possible bail hearing. Crown counsel Robert Mulligan also informed the court he would seek psychiatric assessment by a forensic psychiatrist before Filipchuk's next appearance in court. Mulligan said it was believed the accused man was on bail awaiting trial on a similar charge.

A Sidney man was fined $150 for towing a water-skier without a second person being in the boat.

Stan Collins, 27, of 9927-7th Street, pleaded guilty to the charge and court was told he was seen by Sidney RCMP towing a water-skier in Deep Cove on June 13 without a man acting as lookout in the boat. Court was told police saw the skier fall into the water, Collins turn around to effect a rescue and the pair coming into shore, where Collins was charged.

Thomas Phillip Henry, 20, of 2823 West Saanich Road, was fined on one conviction of driving while suspended and given a jail term for the second conviction.

Court was told Henry was stopped by Central Saanich police March 12 and handed a 24-hour, roadside suspension. A taxi was called by police and Henry ordered the taxi to take him to the Prairie Inn nearby and then back to the car.

On July 4, Henry was stopped by Saanich police at

WASHINGTON (UPI)

President Carter would be prepared to use nuclear weapons to thwart any Communist attack on NATO members and would back efforts to regain any land lost through invasion, his chief spokesman said Wednesday.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said a suggestion that the United States would accept Soviet occupation of parts of West Germany or other NATO lands was "flatly wrong."

He said the administration was confident any lands lost through an attack could be regained by force.

Syndicated columnist Rowland Evans and Robert Novak reported Wednesday that Carter's national security advisers had drawn up a new defence strategy conceding one-third of West Germany to communist invaders. They said the advisers concluded the administration could not win in a conventional defence spending to shore up military power in Europe.

Powell denied the report.

"Our policy remains unchanged in its totality," he said, adding that nuclear weapons remained a key part of defence strategy.

"What is appropriate to use, when and where," would depend on the specific situation, he said.

"The idea that our policy would accept a Soviet occupation of NATO territories is flatly wrong."

"We are committed to having the capability, along with our allies, to halt any Warsaw pact attack as quickly as possible and to restore pre-war boundaries, thus maintaining NATO territories," he said.

Powell said the Evans-Novak column was based on information from "a wide-ranging discussion of responses available to us in the event of an attack, which included political options but certainly was not limited to them."

"This review reaffirms existing strategy," Powell said.

He said response to any attack would rest on a policy that involved conventional, tactical nuclear and strategic nuclear weapons.

Declining to go into specifics on dealing with an invasion, Powell said, "Our response to such a situation would be other than words."

And he said, "It is our policy to regain any territory that might be lost in an invasion."

States to accept a loss or defence Secretary Harold Brown, testifying before a Senate armed services subcommittee, also denied the Evans-Novak report.

"I do not advocate, and would not support, a policy which called for the United

Bridge felt nothing

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — The first indication that the CN ferry William Carson was in trouble as she steamed through ice off southern Labrador June 2 was a telephone call to the bridge from the engine room. Two members of the crew told a judicial inquiry Wednesday.

Quartermaster Harris Roland Kinden was at the wheel and Martin Walsh was on lookout when the third mate answered the engine room phone in the bridge shortly before 9 p.m.

Kinden said the third mate, John Rudolph, told Capt. Norman Hinks, who also was on the bridge at the time, that there was a hole in the ship.

The Carson sank at 1:45 a.m. June 3 about 16 miles off the southern Labrador coast. All 90 crew members and 38 passengers were rescued without injury by the coast guard icebreaker Sir Humphrey Gilbert and search and rescue helicopters.

The 8,300-ton vessel was making her first trip of the season from St. John's to Goose Bay in southern Labrador.

Kinden said the captain left the bridge upon receiving the third mate's report and came back a few minutes later and said, "We're sinking."

The quartermaster said the captain then obtained the ship's position from the third mate and sent a distress call over marine radio.

Kinden said everybody was in the lifeboats within an hour and passengers and crew later watched the vessel sink.

Questioned by F. J. Aylward, a St. John's lawyer representing Hinks, Kinden said he felt nothing unusual as the vessel moved through the ice. He said steering was more difficult because of the slower speed and ice. Walsh also said he felt no unusual vibrations.

Payment for Wallace: He'll let court decide

Crowding the act at public trough?

George Mussalem (SC — Dewdney) added yet another twist Wednesday to the convoluted debate on the Constitution Act.

Mussalem noted that few, if any, members of the Legislature failed to take advantage of the subsidized meals provided members in the official legislative dining room.

And he suggested that by participating in that subsidized program they were, in effect, receiving extra money from the government or at least part of their meal costs was being borne by the taxpayer.

Under the old terms of the Constitution Act it appears to be illegal for any MLA to receive extra benefits of any kind unless they are for work done for specific government or Legislature appointed committees, commissions or boards.

By JIM HUNNE
Colonist Reporter

Conservative leader Scott Wallace Wednesday became the fourth British Columbia MLA to stand in possible violation of the Constitution Act. He will seek a B.C. Supreme Court ruling to clear his name.

In a dramatic statement to the house Wednesday afternoon Wallace said he had innocently received payment of $192.85 for expenses incurred during attendance at the B.C. Conference on the Family in 1976.

Wallace said once the matter was brought to his attention he sought legal advice and was told that he appeared to be in violation of the act but that the act was so archaic that a clear ruling was difficult to obtain.

"Having sought a legal opinion, I am advised that whether or not the Constitution Act has been breached or not is not clear," Wallace said.

"What is perfectly clear is the fact that on Oct. 24, 1976, a cheque for $51.95, and on Dec. 8, 1976, a cheque for $38.85 were paid by the ministry of human resources to cover some of my travel expenses. On Nov. 4, 1976, the Richmond Inn was paid $82.15 to cover the cost of three nights' accommodation while I attended the conference."

Recreation Minister Sam Bawlf, Agriculture Minister James Hewitt, and Social Credit backbencher George Kersey (Coburn) are awaiting rulings on whether or not they breached the Constitution Act in 1976. All three received payment of expenses incurred while doing work on Housing Minister Hugh Curran's committee on housing.

The Constitution Act permits cabinet ministers to receive expenses. It also permits commission members, board members and members of cabinet on legislative committees to receive expense payments. The act makes no mention of expense payments to MLAs who perform tasks for a cabinet minister not authorized by cabinet order or the authority of the full Legislature.

Opposition members instituted the original motions of breach of privilege against the three Social Credit members. Wallace said he wanted to bring his problem to the house himself.

Any offence I may have committed was certainly done without intent and it may well be proven that I did not breach the Constitution Act," Wallace said. He added that whatever the circumstances or the interpretation placed on the events concerning him, "I believe the proper thing to do"

Forced addict treatment 'never works'

Compulsory treatment for B.C. heroin addicts will be in place by the end of 1978, Health Minister Robert McClelland said Wednesday.

Former health minister Dennis Cooke immediately labelled the statement "a political announcement" and said he was prepared to "bet compulsory treatment never comes into being." Even if it did, Cooke said, it would prove ineffective. "Compulsory incarceration of heroin addicts, then their release back into the community, has never worked," he said.

Despite the quick critical response McClelland said the compulsory treatment plan had the full backing of cabinet.

"It will require new health legislation and will emphasize treatment of the addict as a sick person needing help rather than as a criminal," he said.

Target date for implementation is Dec. 31, 1978.

Victoria, Nanaimo and three mainland cities will have community care systems with a main 150-bed facility in the Vancouver area.

"The 'hard case' addict would be committed for treatment to an in-patient unit," McClelland said. "As an alternative an addict could be referred to an in-patient unit as a voluntary patient or, where the personal history justified it, an addict could be referred to an out-patient community clinic."

"Preliminary plans call for a minimum of three years' treatment for every addict committed to the program."

The minister said he would probably introduce the required legislation in the spring session, 1978.

"We need a new, fresh attack on the heroin problem in B.C. to augment the attempt by police agencies to stem the flow of narcotics into the community," he said.

The NDP proposed earlier this year that a heroin maintenance program be established to help combat the problem.

Conservative party leader Scott Wallace said that he agreed in principle with the government proposal, but that he has reservations about its operation.

Wallace, a medical doctor, said application of the program could be dangerous because "this government hasn't been outstanding in understanding problems of young people."

He said strong safeguards were needed to ensure that the program wouldn't be abused and that decisions made to hold someone for treatment are regularly reviewed.

McClelland said the compulsory aspect of the new legislation would not be precedent setting. "Under the Mental Health Act and the Venereal Disease Suppression Act, for example, authority is vested in specific health officials to direct persons into treatment where warranted for their own or others' well being." There are appropriate penalties for non-compliance.

The minister said the new legislation would include appeal procedures for individuals disagreeing with the compulsory aspects of the bill.

Wolfe, service union trade strike threats

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

The B.C. Government Employees' Union wage dispute began to take on a rough and tumble appearance Wednesday as Finance Minister Evan Wolfe jumped into the picture with threats that were quickly matched by the union.

Wolfe warned that any selective strike action by the 37,000-member union could be met with a government lockdown of all but essential workers.

John Fryer, BCGEU general secretary, accused Wolfe of intimidation and raised the possibility of charging the minister under the B.C. Labor Code.

Wolfe was strongly critical of Fryer and before the day was out was caught in a crossfire of criticism from Fryer and former NDP labor minister William King.

Fryer said he was naive. King said his action was "extremely foolish."

Wolfe's ire was raised by the union's decision to idle one or more "target groups" of employees — likely liquor store workers — if the membership favors strike action in a vote expected to be completed by mid-September. The vote won't be taken until after mediation service have been used.

But if Wolfe is angry, so is the union. It considers a wage offer of less than what is allowed by the Anti-Inflation

Board guidelines to be insulting.

The offer is for a 4 1/2-per cent wage increase in the first year and three per cent in the second. The AIB allows six per cent in the first year and four per cent in the second.

Also unacceptable, says Fryer, is the government's stand against continuation of a cost-of-living allowance and objection to having grievances go to arbitration.

Actually, the union's threat to take out one group such as the liquor store workers was first reported in the Colonist almost two months ago, but there was no threat of government reprisal at that time.

Interior may be first to feel IWA shutdown

There were indications Wednesday night that the International Woodworkers of America — B.C.'s biggest union — is ready to launch strike action in the southern interior, possibly as early as next week.

If it occurs, it will be because of failure to win industry agreement on the form an over-all pension plan is to take.

High-ranking IWA sources said that the southern Interior is the most likely strike target, but that if a walkout there didn't achieve the necessary results it could spread quickly to the coastal region, which includes Vancouver Island.

A formal announcement of the 42,000 IWA members in B.C. and the union served strike notice some time ago on the coastal and southern Interior regions, but took no action. Last month it hailed as an important breakthrough, agreement by the province's three regions — coastal, southern and northern Interior — to accept one over-all pension plan. This would mean a portable pension at last for IWA members working anywhere in western Canada.

However, as late as last week, the union said it ran into pension proposals from the industry that it found unacceptable.

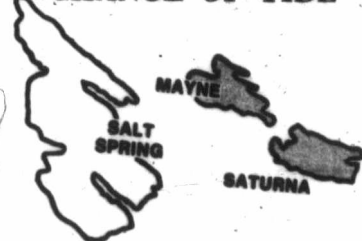

The two contentious points: ● The industry wants past service credits to go only to existing IWA members, something the union calls a "dou-

Salt Spring: Widening gulf between old and new

A LOOK at the future of the beautiful Gulf Islands — and their distinctive life styles — is taken in this four-part series by Colonist reporter Nancy Brown. Under the pressure of increasing permanent populations, summer residents, and hordes of tourists, the islands are bending but proving resilient in fighting for their former status. People progress and over-government are what concern long-time residents.

THREE ISLANDS at a CHANGE OF TIDE

Second of four parts

"As long as the ferries are few and far between, and they are crowded and expensive, Salt Spring Island will survive."

"But if they run more frequently then it will become just part of the Saanich Peninsula, and if they build that bridge from Vancouver that they talk about, then we will be just a bedroom suburb of Vancouver."

That's Hank Schubart talking after nine years on the island.

He's an architect who had a hand in the Salt Spring Island community plan, and who worries quite a bit these days about the future of what used to be a quiet little island.

HIS CONCERNS are reflected in conversations with many of the island's oldtimers who wonder how to keep the island rural without denying access to others who seek peace and quiet.

Many residents agree with Schubart's assessment that the key to the future lies with the provincial government and its handling of the ferries.

"A road is a line between two points and a ferry route is a dotted line, but the more frequent the service the closer the dots get, and soon you have the equivalent of a road," Schubart said.

Once travel becomes convenient and comfortable, the scenic quality of the island will attract more people.

"When that happens property prices will increase, the rural areas will change to suburban, life will get more and more regulated, and this will become a rich man's enclave," Schubart says.

Population growth on the island has been slow but steady.

Twenty years ago the island counted a population of 2,800, and it now has 4,500 residents.

BUT BUILDING is going on at a rapid pace.

In the first six months of this year the Capital Region issued 201 building permits to an approximate value of $2,154,682. The figure almost equals last year's total of 268 permits.

And there is a shift in the population, which at one time consisted in the main of retired people.

There is a younger population, both of youngsters who grew up on the island and who want to remain and newcomers who feel they can have a calmer way of life.

The influx of these young people has meant that the school population has increased from 160 to 710 in the last 20 years, the fastest increase occurring over the last five to 10 years.

These young people have

By PAUL DEGROOT
Colonist Reporter

The battle for "comprehensive" education appears to have been lost with the introduction of the new Colleges and Provincial Institutes Act. Camosun College council vice-chairman Lavinia Greenwood said Wednesday.

Mrs. Greenwood said the legislation appeared to set academic and technical programs completely apart from each other, but some college educators would like to see trades students get some exposure to the humanities, arts, and sciences during their training.

The division between academic and technical programs could be mitigated if the regulations drawn up to enforce the legislation allow students some flexibility in arranging their training programs, Mrs. Greenwood said.

By not setting any restrictions on the student body of colleges the bill is very student-oriented, she added.

Excessive regulation of students, by setting a minimum age for entry, for instance, could restrict student freedom.

"It has left the students free, and I like that," Mrs. Greenwood said.

Student freedom could be enhanced if provincial adjudication of programs through three provincial councils makes possible greater transferability of courses taken at different institutions, and permits students to attend any college they wish, even one outside their own areas, without penalty.

The three councils, one each for occupational training, academic programs, and college management, could be a disaster "if they build up their own bureaucracy," Mrs. Greenwood said.

She expressed concern particularly about the management advisory council, made up of the principals of all of the colleges and ministry representatives.

"We appoint a principal to run the college, and then he goes down to his own council and tells us how much money we have to work with."

The time spent on the management advisory council also cut into principals' responsibilities to their colleges, according to Mrs. Greenwood.

"A lot depends on who the government appoints to the other two councils," she said.

"It looks to me as though they are moving the money decisions away from direct government and political control."

Assuming that the councils themselves do not become politically involved, that will be welcomed by most institutions, although those with the most influence in the education ministry might not like the new arrangement, she said.

The new legislation will greatly alter the Greater Victoria school board's say at Camosun. Instead of the five members which it now appoints to the college council (which will become a college board under the new legislation), it will appoint only one.

Sooke and Saanich school districts currently do not participate in Camosun College governance or finance, but they may become part of the college region in the future, and thus be eligible to have representatives on the college board.

If the Gulf Islands school district were included in the new college region, and if the Cowichan school district were to exercise its right to send a representative to both Malaspina and Camosun, five school boards could be represented on the board. The province would appoint four representatives, bringing the number of board members to nine, down only slightly from the present ten-member college council, Mrs. Greenwood said.

Dr. Hal Knight, former Camosun College council chairman, and still a member of the council, said he saw little in the legislation which could be attributed to a report which he submitted to the ministry of education this spring on behalf of the B.C. Association of Colleges.

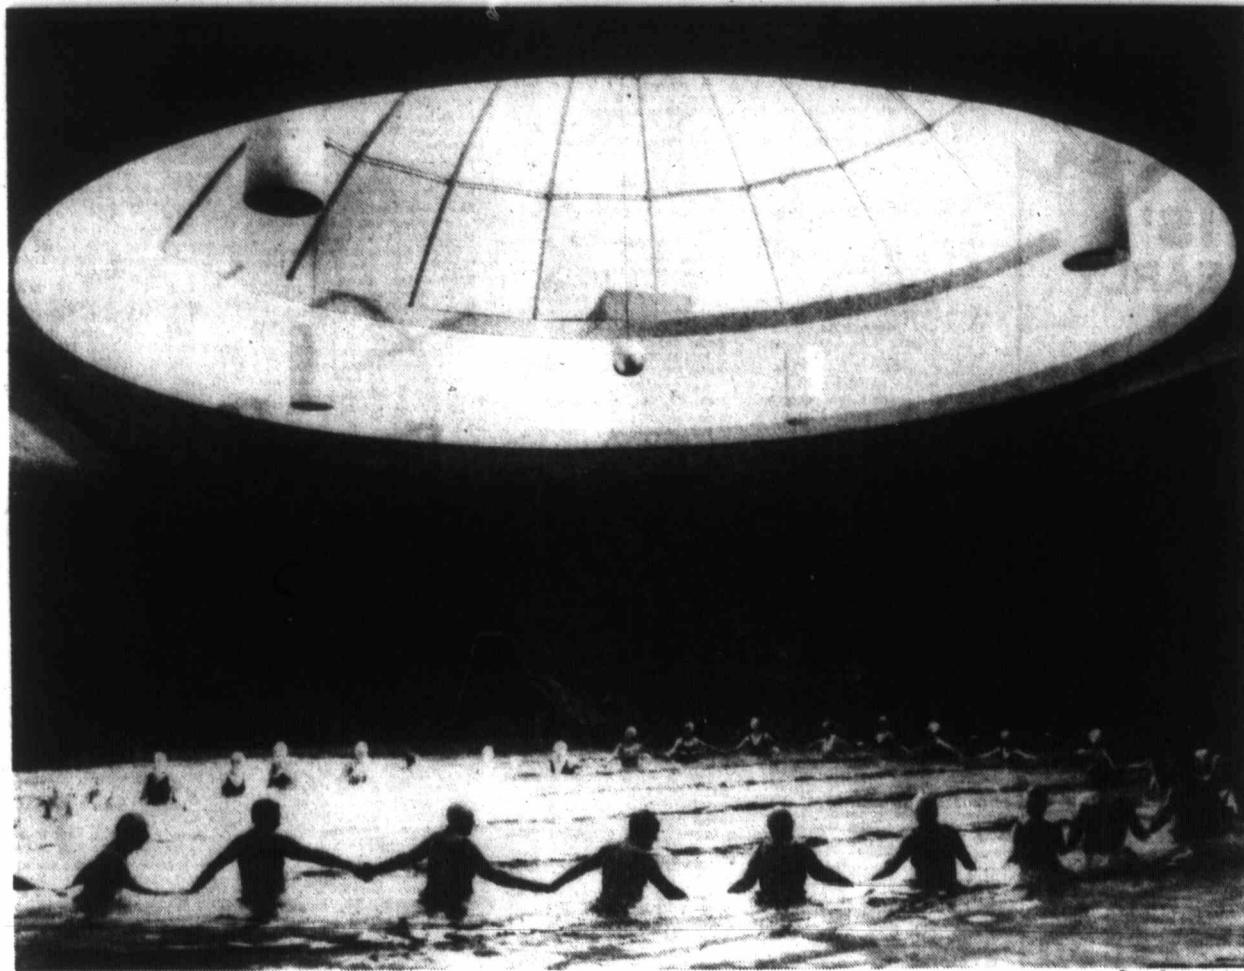

The report recommended, among other things, that college councillors (now board members) be elected, but the new legislation makes it theoretically possible for none of the members on a college board to be elected, and also makes the appointment of a board chairman the right of the provincial government, rather than of other members on the board.

Knight said the main changes are the provision to make colleges corporations, which will permit them to borrow money on their own, and the new administrative arrangement with three councils to supervise various aspects of all the province's colleges, removing much of the authority now exercised by local councils.

Tourist flow up sharply after slump

By BILL SMITH
Colonist Reporter

Tourist traffic through Victoria, well down in June, had a sharp upsurge in July.

Donald Nixon, manager of the Victoria Visitors' Information office, said Wednesday that traffic last month indicated "we've rounded the bend and are on the upsurge."

Most attractions, restaurants, hotels and motels, are reporting increases in business over the same period of last year anywhere from 10 to 20 per cent, he said.

"We started to surge ahead about mid-June and haven't looked back since."

June proved to be a little better than June of 1976 when the flow of tourists, compared to previous years, dropped drastically. Doubling of fares on B.C. Ferries, the summer Olympics in Montreal and the United States bicentennial celebrations were all cited as contributing factors for the decline of tourist traffic to Canada.

The increase in traffic has meant that Nixon had to begin operating his hotel and motel reference system much earlier this year.

Nixon said he had not had to set the system in operation in past years until August, but he had to start it last month because of inquiries for rooms.

His office makes daily checks with motel and hotel operators to find out who has rooms available for visitors arriving in the city without reservations.

He said the number of people coming into his Causeway office for information about the area showed a 16 per cent increase last month over the same month a year ago.

Although figures for July will not be available until next week, Nixon believes that passenger loadings aboard B.C. Ferries will show a sharp increase over the previous month and over July of 1976.

Nixon, who estimates value of the tourist industry to Victoria at $140 million, said the external advertising campaign embarked on this spring is reaping a rich harvest.

The program has resulted in a four-fold increase in the number of inquiries for information about Vancouver Island, he said.

One sector particularly grateful for the tourist boom are the motel operators along the scenic Gorge, Nixon said.

"These people took an awful beating last year."

He does, however, agree with Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Alan Emery's call for a detailed study of a government-operated casino proposal.

"It's an idea certainly worthy of consideration," he said, stressing that the gambling enterprise should be developed along the lines of a Monte Carlo casino, rather than a Las Vegas operation.

Running low?

Police fund queried

Saanich council wants a detailed report from the police board on the state of its contingency fund.

The request was made Tuesday after aldermen were told the $10,000 fund might be depleted.

The situation came to light as council was discussing a request from the board for $1,000 to repair damage caused by a prisoner in the jail area of the Vernon Avenue police station.

The damage occurred in June, when a person left alone in an interview room kicked in a plaster wall. The plaster has since been replaced with plywood.

Finance committee chairman Ald. Ian Cass said the request should be held in abeyance pending a detailed explanation of all expenditures from the fund.

The amount placed in the fund was substantial and "we should be given a full accounting."

Ald. Sandy Noel said he was prepared to endorse the request on the grounds that "we have responsible people on the board."

Saanich chief puts tag on new Helmcken hospital

Fire protection: $100,000 a year

Saanich expects to be asked soon to provide fire protection for the new Helmcken Road hospital, and Fire chief Harold Gains will recommend to council that contract for the service be negotiated. He put the cost at more than $100,000 a year.

Gains said a new firehall should be built near the over-pass at Elk Lake Drive and Royal Oak Avenue, to replace the one now in operation on Hamsterly.

Protection for the 300-bed hospital could be provided from either the main firehall on Vernon Avenue or from the new Royal Oak building, Gains said.

Council's fire committee has recommended $10,000 be spent on working drawings for the proposed building.

The drawings will be done by William Turkington, a former lieutenant with the Saanich fire department who now works as a designer.

Council was forced to seek new drawings because the five bids received earlier this year were all considerably higher than the estimated cost.

The decision to commission Turkington to design the building has drawn the ire of Victoria architect Peter Orme.

In a letter to the committee, to be discussed at a meeting next week, Orme says the municipality is violating the Architects' Act by allowing a former fireman to prepare working drawings for the new $250,000 firehall.

He said buildings costing more than $100,000 required "professional involvement."

According to the act, professional involvement implies the designer or architect must be licensed with the Architectural Institute of B.C.

Saanich plans hearing on Royal Oak industry

Saanich council will hold a public hearing next month on the controversial issue of an industrial park at Royal Oak.

Council Tuesday voted endorsement of a lands, planning and housing committee recommendation that a public hearing be held at the earliest possible date.

The hearing will deal only with the first phase of development which involves about 80 acres in the 140-acre tract of land under consideration.

The site is bounded on the north by Mann, east by the Pat Bay Highway and south by Kay and Vanalman.

In other business, council:

● Rejected a rezoning application by R. D. Baxter affecting land at Little Eldon Place, site of a proposed 12-unit apartment on 12,500 square feet near Rudd Park.

The advisory planning commission recommended rejection on the grounds that the development was incompatible with the existing single-family use and because it could have a deleterious effect on possible future development in the area.

Council was told the draft official community plan indicated the area would gradually redevelop to a higher density, but the character of the neighborhood, condition of the houses and the size of the site indicated the proposed use was inappropriate at this time.

● Sent to public hearing an application by Munro Development to rezone land on Quadra from detached housing to general commercial.

It is proposed to erect a two-storey office-retail building on the 12,000-square-foot site.

Extreme fire hazard shuts Bear Hill Park

Extreme fire hazard conditions have prompted the Capital Region to close Bear Hill Park in Central Saanich starting today.

According to a spokesman Wednesday, the closure will remain in effect until the hot, dry weather conditions subside.

Bear Hill is the first of the Capital Region's 10 parks to be closed because of the fire threat. East Sooke Park will likely be closed soon if the weather conditions don't change, according to the spokesman.

Bear Hill is of special concern to the region because it has no access routes to its summit in the event of a fire.

As yet there have been no fires in any of the region's parks this season.

"We've been very fortunate because of the conscientiousness of the people using the parks," the spokesman said.

Dispute remains up in air

No new developments were reported Wednesday in the dispute that has partially disrupted AirWest Airlines Ltd. service since last Friday.

Management personnel said they were still maintaining regular service between Victoria and Vancouver and on the Victoria-Seattle run. However, the seaplane service from Vancouver to Nanaimo, Duncan and Powell River was reported "out for a few days."

Employees, members of the Teamsters Union, walked off the job Friday to take part in a "study session" as a result of the firing of a co-pilot who had failed a route check examination.

The union charged that the co-pilot had only been with the company two weeks and hadn't been prepared for such an examination.

The union and company are also involved in a contract dispute that threatens to break into a full-fledged strike momentarily. However, both sides say the current work stoppage is being treated as separate from the main dispute.
